

BARRETT LEADS CABINET INTO THE WILDERNESS

The provincial cabinet began some collective soul-searching today in a secluded hideaway near Cowichan Lake.

For the second year in a row, Premier Dave Barrett and his cabinet quietly slipped away to Mesachie Lake forestry camp for a two-day think-tank session away from the distractions of their Victoria offices.

There was no official announcement or confirmation of the meeting but indications are the cabinet has gathered for policy discussions, to review their performance over last year and discuss future plans.

Pre-election strategy is likely high on the agenda. A year ago, the cabinet also met at the remote government forestry camp for an in-depth examination of their first two years in office. (Saturday will be the third anniversary of the NDP's election).

At the close of last year's meeting, Premier Barrett said the cabinet had decided the government needed a public relations campaign to tell the people of B.C. what the NDP has done in office.

The ministers had decided, he said, they had spent too much time being administrators and not enough time being politicians and selling themselves to the public.

Barrett followed that meeting with a province-wide tour and this year again plans a lengthy provincial tour starting in the latter part of September.

The premier and other party officials replied that his questioner appeared to have a highly rigid, orthodox and conservative view of federalism which they see as flexible enough to adapt to their requirements.

"What we are asking for is only normal," Bourassa said.

Legal Action Names Austin

VANCOUVER (CP) — New-appointed Senator Jack Austin has been named as a defendant in a B.C. Supreme Court suit alleging his failure to deliver 26,000 common shares of stock in two companies.

The action by M.M. Menzies Holdings Ltd. seeks court enforcement of Austin's share of two alleged agreements between the company and Austin and other partners in February, 1971.

The writ claims Austin owes Menzies 1,375 common shares in the capital stock of Brenda Mines Ltd., and 24,625 common shares in the capital stock of Brameda Resources Ltd. as his part of the agreement.

The writ also claims damages and costs.

Austin, 43, was appointed Tuesday to the Senate vacancy created by the death of Arthur Laing. Earlier this year, Austin's business dealings were questioned in Parliament but Prime Minister Trudeau defended him as a "fully competent and assiduous member" of his personal staff.

These facts indicate "obvious risks" for what Bourassa refers to as the Quebec community, that is the French-speaking Quebec population.

vative MP Howard Johnston and by the Kimberley, B.C. bagpipe band.

An absentee on the U.S. side was Montana Senator Lee Metcalf, who has been critical of Ford's energy policies, accusing him of withholding funds for hydroelectric development in the Northwest, although Montana's other senator, Mike Mansfield, participated.

The dam, 17 miles up the Kootenai River from this Montana town named after a gold prospector's daughter, memorializes the Columbia Treaty in a 57-foot "treaty tower".

Libby dam represents the fulfillment of the Columbia Treaty obligations on both sides of the border. B.C. built three treaty dams, Keenleyside, Duncan and Mica in return for a cash payment of $273 million, representing the power benefits generated in the U.S. plus $64 million representing flood control benefits. The U.S. built Libby, which has flooded a reservoir extending 42 miles into B.C. The actual dam is 48 miles from the international boundary.

The commission was told the service would likely increase tourism in Victoria since many people attending Seattle conventions wished to visit B.C.'s capital but often did not have sufficient time to make the trip on existing services.

It would also benefit business travel between the two centres and aid government officials dealing with the provincial government in Victoria and U.S. federal offices in Seattle.

The committee's decision said Air West must obtain approval from the appropriate U.S. authorities before initiating flights. However it quoted an official of the Washington State Aeronautics Commission as saying that the nature of the proposed service would not require approval from the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board and would only have to meet safety and operational requirements of the U.S. Federal Aviation Authority.

According to the corps of engineers, those benefits include prevention of flooding in Montana and Idaho which would otherwise have caused $22 million damage in 1972 and 1974 alone, plus additional power generation at other U.S. dams in the Columbia system amounting to 248,000 kilowatts a year.

Ford and Macdonald Sunday flicked the switch to start up the first of four power generators at Libby itself, scheduled to provide a power capacity of 420,000 kilowatts by next spring. Another four generators are to be added by 1984, doubling the capacity.

Feeling are especially strong in B.C. where Barrett has called the treaty the biggest bungle in B.C. history, charging that it will cost B.C. taxpayers millions of dollars to pay for benefits to the Americans, and has urged that the treaty be renegotiated.

While Barrett's urging has been ignored so far, U.S. officials in Washington say that the treaty remains a sensitive issue in some places.

In fact an opportunity to renegotiate terms will come up in 1994.

A communiqué from the Portuguese-held naval station in the Timor capital of Dili said the mortar bombardment damaged the rescue ship Macdill Sunday night, forcing it to weigh anchor and flee the port.

Officials received the communiqué in Macao, the closest Portuguese possession to Timor. The Dili naval base is the only part of the Pacific Island still under Portuguese control.

3 Colonels' Lives Spared

ATHENS (UPI) — The government today commuted the death sentences imposed by an appeal court on former dictator George Papandreu and two of his closest lieutenants for their role in overthrowing democracy in April 1967.

The action brought immediate protests and new calls from socialist leaders for carrying out the death sentence by firing squad. Several hundred leftist youths gathered outside Athens University and Athens Polytechnic. They carried banners and placards reading "No to Fascism!" and "Death to the fascists!" and "Death to the junta murderers!"

A government announcement issued after a special cabinet meeting said: "The government cabinet has unanimously decided to propose the commutation of the three death sentences to life imprisonment as soon as the decision of the appeal court becomes final."

Earlier, Socialist Party Leader Andreas Papandreu demanded the execution of the death sentences.

"Yes, we are for the execution of the sentences imposed by justice," Papandreu told reporters early today.

The government, criticized for the speed with which it acted in commuting the sentences, said a delay in such a case would create confusion.

"Those who attacked the government aimed at creating upheaval and at causing political passions to flare up," a government spokesman said.

U.S. Firms Paid $100 Million Out in Bribes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than $100 million in legal and illegal payments to foreign and domestic politicians and sales agents have been paid in the past decade by 36 corporations, according to information tracked down in public documents.

The world's biggest corporation, Exxon, made the largest payments recorded, $46 million to Italian politicians. But Exxon said they were legal.

Lockheed's payments totalled $22 million at least since 1970, the company told the SEC.

The company said the money was paid to "foreign officials and to foreign political organizations in a number of countries."

Lockheed's payments were being studied in a hearing today by chairman William Proxmire of the Senate Banking Committee.

Proxmire has been a critic of the government's guarantees for loans to Lockheed, a financially-troubled aircraft maker.

Lockheed borrowed $250 million with federal support in 1971.

Northrop paid $450,000 in bribes to two Saudi Arabian generals and $1.1 million in illegal domestic political contributions in addition to $30 million in questioned commission payments to foreign agents.

The Pentagon explained in a 1974 memo made public this summer how payments to foreign agents are used to bribe government officials.

Nixon himself made a visit to Libby in 1971 an occasion memorable on two counts. When he pulled a lanyard to unload a ceremonial cement mixer, the concrete had solidified, and, second, he made a public statement advocating that the dam site be enhanced by a trailer camp community.

The reservoir has been partially named Lake Koocanusa, standing for Koocanusa, Canada and U.S.A., the inspiration of Libby resident Mrs. Alice Beer, which convinced former president Richard Nixon to sign a bill to this effect in 1971.

Victim of Stroke Airlifted from Boat

An American commercial fisherman was rescued 100 miles off the West Coast of Vancouver Island Sunday afternoon by an armed forces helicopter from CFB Comox after he had a stroke.

John Bell of Sitka, Alaska, was with his wife aboard the 48-foot troller Jackie Bell when he was taken ill. His wife radioed for help.

The helicopter airlifted him and took him to St. Joseph's Hospital in Comox. Bell, whose left side is paralyzed, is reported in stable condition.

Bell's wife is taking the boat to Bellingham and will be met at the mouth of the Juan de Fuca by a U.S. coast guard cutter.

The incident was one of 46 handled by the centre during the weekend.

Failure to file a change in flight plans caused an unnecessary search for a Tofino couple, whose single-engine light aircraft was due at Prince Rupert Friday at 9 p.m.

The centre spokesman said the man and his wife were traced "by various means" and found safe and sound at Port McNeill Sunday evening.

Red Victory Complete

BANGKOK (UPI) — The Communists have emerged in firm control of Laos at the end of weekend of government organized celebrations marking the end of a 30-year conquest of Indochina.

The apparently peaceful takeover of Vientiane province in Laos culminated a three-decade Communist sweep across Indochina in the face of Japanese, French and U.S. guns.

Diplomatic sources in Vientiane said the Communist Pathet Lao apparently intends to let the old Laotian coalition government remain in existence for the time being.

But the sources said neutralist Prime Minister Souvanna Phouma would exert little more than figurehead authority and the Communists would be the undisputed power in Laos.

Souvanna, in a telephone interview with the New York Times, said "everything is calm" in the Laotian capital.

"I am still Prime Minister."

The Pathet Lao called a mass rally in the Laotian capital Saturday to mark the "setting up of the people's revolutionary administration in the city and other parts of Vientiane province."

Vientiane Radio, monitored in Bangkok, said 100,000 persons attended the celebrations, hailing the takeover of the last non-Communist province in the tiny, landlocked kingdom.

Monsoon rains pounded down upon Vientiane during the celebrations, blurring the letters of giant, red-and-white banners declaring "All Americans Must Get Out."

The radio said Thao Moun, chairman of the so-called power seizure committee in Vientiane, denounced "criminal acts of U.S. aggression" in Laos.

But a spokesman for the U.S. embassy said the Laotian government made no moves to oust the remaining 30 U.S. diplomats from the country.

The announcement of the Communist takeover had been expected since Friday, when Laotian authorities barred entry into the country and shut off telephone calls. Pathet Lao soldiers re-opened Vientiane airport Sunday.

Growth Pains

It seems unbelievable in these times of eight per cent unemployment, but Alcan is recruiting tradesmen outside the country to work at its Kitimat aluminum smelter. To fill 20 vacancies for industrial electricians and millwrights, Alcan recruiters went to Seattle, Detroit and Buffalo — areas in the U.S. where unemployment is greater than in Canada. Last year, the company went to Hong Kong searching for tradesmen. That was the first trip outside Canada by Kitimat personnel officers to look for staff.

The United Kingdom and Germany will also be looked at, depending on the response from the job recruiters' American swing.

"The incredible fact is that manpower resources in Canada, for certain jobs are exhausted," notes Kitimat's newspaper, the Alcan-run Ingot. "If the job requires unskilled labor there is no problem to fill it. Skilled tradesmen are hard to find."

In numbers, the need for unskilled labor is greater. In July alone, 76 employees quit. Smelting aluminum is hard, exacting work. Kitimat is hardly Palm Springs, either, although the company is improving conditions. The weather — almost two inches of rain on one day in July alone — the isolation of Kitimat and Keman, its sister community where the enormous amounts of power needed for smelting are generated, the exacting working conditions are all factors in the instability of the work force, and other extreme measures Alcan has had to take to find skilled and unskilled workers.

And Kitimat was a planned community, since the day 25 years ago when the townsite was cleared out of the bush. A planner laid out Kitimat and a detailed town plan with various types of zoning was drawn up in 1952. Development has followed the plan roughly, but obviously, the careful work of a quarter century ago didn't meet the problems Alcan has faced in attracting a stable work force.

Is the answer a ban on all "company towns," as Alf Nunweiler, the minister without portfolio who is responsible for northern affairs in B.C., told the royal commission on the forest industry? He wants extensive re search on the problems of communities such as Kitimat and Mackenzie and Logan Lake before the government allows any more to be built.

It's ironic that even before Kitimat can work out solutions to its present difficulties, the town may be saddled with a steel mill financed by the British Columbia government. A copper smelter is another not-far-off possibility. According to the man who helped plan Kitimat two decades ago, the population may soon reach 50,000 — Kitimat presently numbers about 12,000 souls.

Planners, social impact experts, architects and pollution control experts are about to descend on the town for a detailed study of all factors relating to establishment of a steel mill. Planner Julian Whittlesey, who drew up Kitimat's first town plan, says part of the solution is to build attractive permanent housing for the project's construction workers, in hopes of getting them to stay on as production workers in the steel mill or copper smelter.

With the building of Alcan's smelter in the early 1950s, Whittlesey said some "rough-edged" construction types ("the toughest bunch of guys you've ever seen") were impressed when the company erected a dining hall for the men building the smelter. "It was nicely made and there were girls serving. The fellows took off their boots and beards. That was the turning point."

Perils of a Rainy August

There are few things as melancholy as the sight of sunshine during the work week that disappears and turns to rainfall on the weekend.

However, the younger generation assures us that there is indeed something more melancholy than that. It is a rainy August. A rainy August, they explain, is always followed by a sunny September.

This means they stay indoors during the summer holidays and when school starts again the sun is beaming down — and they are incarcerated indoors. The only way to get in the mood for school, if there is a way, is to have the rain come thundering down for the full month of September. That makes the end of liberty a little more bearable. The sight of sunshine, on the other hand, makes them feel wretched, wretched, wretched when they have to attend school.

Tch, it must be tough being young.

Only Four Hours!

Islanders and tourists fuming at three or four-hour lineups at ferry terminals this summer — be glad you aren't a Briton trying to return home after a motoring holiday on the continent. The French port of Calais is crowded with hundreds of Englishmen waiting 10 or 12 hours, as long as two days, to get their vehicles aboard a cross-channel ferry.

Cheer up in those long lines, things could be worse. In fact, they almost certainly will be next summer.

Ford Takes Tougher Stance

WASHINGTON — But for the distraction of detente, and the foreign policy "spectaculars" at which he excelled, Richard Nixon's presidency might have ended sooner than it did in resignation and disgrace.

Now his chosen successor, President Gerald Ford, is in the ironic position of seeing his political future clouded by the very policy that helped Nixon delay his inevitable fall from power.

Nixon made detente the centrepiece of his administration — dishonestly inflating the potential of his foreign policy in a desperate effort to overcome Watergate — and Ford is paying the price.

The behavior of the Soviet Union in its relations with the West — particularly Moscow's blatant support of the Communists in Portugal — is quickly demystifying Nixon's foreign policy legacy.

President Ford, in turn, is hard pressed to defend the otherwise admirable goal of detente, which really means no more and no less than a commitment by the two superpowers to attempt to ease tensions by talking before they shoot.

Military Force

Indeed, Ford, a lifelong anti-communist and advocate of a powerful American military force, finds himself under increasing criticism from political rivals that he is soft on Communism.

They don't put it that way, of course — that kind of epithet went out of style with the Communist "witch hunts" of the 1950s. But the critics — who include such announced and potential presidential contenders as Democratic Senator Henry Jackson, Alabama Governor George Wallace, and Republican Ronald Reagan, the former California governor — do not hesitate to say that Ford is being "duped by detente."

With his sensitive political antennae, highly-developed during a quarter century as a Congressman before moving into the White House, the president is certainly aware that his critics reflect a growing sentiment among the American public.

HENRY JACKSON

... urges hard line on Reds

his blunt comment with a renewed assertion that detente must be a two-way street and Portugal must be free to determine its political future without Soviet interference.

Ford told the veterans that detente meant "a fervent desire for peace, but not peace at any price."

It seemed hardly a coincidence that Ford made his remarks only hours after Reagan and Governor Wallace told an other veterans gathering in Los Angeles that detente was benefitting only the Soviet Union and had lulled the United States into dropping its guard.

Speaking at the American Legion convention in Minneapolis, the president warned Moscow that unless there is agreement on the next phase of the nuclear arms limitation talks, he will propose an additional $2 billion to $3 billion for strategic arms spending. He coupled large-scale purchases of wheat by the Soviet Union will eventually result in higher food prices. The Democrats charged that the "Great Grain Robbery" of 1972 was about to be repeated before Ford imposed a temporary embargo on further wheat sales.

The signing by the president of the Helsinki Declaration earlier this month — along with the leaders of 34 other countries, including Canada — added fuel to the fire. The endorsement by the United States of a Declaration of Principles to guide East-West relations was certainly a diplomatic coup for Moscow. The link is barely dry and the harsh reality of detente — Moscow style — is already showing through the cosmetic goodwill in Portugal.

Storm of Criticism

President Ford also encountered a storm of criticism last month when he refused to see exiled Soviet author Alexander Solzhenitsyn, who was visiting Washington at the invitation of Labor Leader George Meany. White House aides admit the decision, made on the advice of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, was a mistake.

The latest Gallup Poll showed Ford's popularity has declined by a notable seven points, from 52 to 45 per cent. Wheat sales to the Soviet Union and other controversial aspects of the Ford administration's detente certainly contributed to the fall.

That was disturbing news for the president as the 1976 election year approaches — and clear warning about the danger of appearing to be "soft on communism" in American politics.

"... I told you when we took in that university student last year that we'd never hear the end of it . . ."

FRED CLEVERLEY

Manitoba's Mosquito War

WINNIPEG — Manitoba has experienced a hot (slap), moist (slap) summer.

It has also been a summer which has produced a somewhat delayed official reaction to the presence of mosquitoes, insects capable of carrying the sometimes fatal western equine encephalitis, commonly called sleeping sickness.

Throughout the heaviest infestation period, the city of Winnipeg fought what everyone believed to be its third futile battle with the Manitoba Clean Environment Commission.

For the past two years, the commission has turned thumbs down on city applications to use its rather impressive mosquito abatement control equipment to fog residential areas with insecticide.

Just two weeks ago the commission backed down a bit, possibly shaken by an unexpected warning from Dr. Emanuel Snell, the provincial epidemiologist that there was a real danger from sleeping sickness if the insects were not destroyed.

When this initial warning was backed up by Winnipeg's health officer, Dr. Roper Cadham, who said authorities were playing "Russian roulette" with lives by banning insecticides, the Clean Environment Commission issued an order permitting Winnipeg to fog during one, but only one infestation.

MOSQUITO... the spray is coming crop of mosquitoes, and reports began drifting in of sleeping sickness, known to be carried by a particular variety of mosquito, in both horses and humans.

State authorities began an immediate program of aerial and ground spraying in efforts to control the disease. In Manitoba, which had its last severe sleeping sickness epidemic in 1941, with 541 cases, and 79 deaths, the clean environment's no-fogging order remained.

There had already been arguments in public, and on the newspaper editorial pages, about the wisdom of allowing an appointed commission to thwart the wishes of an elected body, such as the Winnipeg city council.

Last week Steve Juba, Winnipeg's often flamboyant and eternally political mayor, changed all that. Accompanied by several city councillors, the mayor stormed into Premier Ed Schreyer's regular weekly news conference and demanded some action on the mosquito problem.

He invited the premier to the window of the provincial government's cabinet room, where the conference was being held, to witness the arrival of a convoy consisting of all 16 city-owned spray trucks. The drivers parked them and walked away.

Then, turning to the crowd of newsmen attending the premier's weekly conference, the mayor launched into a plea for mosquito spraying, despite the rulings of the Clean Environment Commission.

He said the city was turning over its equipment to the province. The plea ended with the mayor turning to the premier and telling him: "God bless you. If one of our citizens dies from sleeping sickness."

It quickly became apparent that the province had been thinking about that possibility. Earlier provincial health authorities had announced that it had stationed what it called "sentinel flocks" of chickens in key locations, on the theory that birds are usually attacked first, and that a continuing check on the blood condition of these chickens could provide an advance warning of a possible epidemic.

It was only after the mayor's unorthodox invasion of the premier's news conference that the full extent of provincial preparations for a mosquito war became evident.

The acting minister of health, Saul Miller, called his own news conference two hours later, to inform the public that he had declared a state of health emergency in Manitoba, thus suspending the Clean Environment's authority to control the emission of pollutants into the atmosphere.

He announced that the province had rented, on a standby basis for the past week, a DC-6 spray aircraft, and that beginning as soon as weather conditions permitted, the city of Winnipeg would be sprayed with insecticide from the air and from the ground fogging trucks.

He said other, smaller communities, such as Portage la Prairie and Steinbach would also be sprayed, with all operations co-ordinated by the Manitoba Emergency Measures Organization.

The EMO group sprung into action immediately, co-ordinating information about any suspected cases of encephalitis, issuing gauze face masks to those who might be affected by the insecticide, and issuing hourly bulletins on Winnipeg radio stations.

Rights Test

Once again, the B.C. Human Rights Commission has taken to tilting at windmills. The purpose of the B.C. Human Rights Act is to prevent discrimination against persons by reason of their race, religion, colour, marital status, ancestry, place of origin, age, or sex."

The commission has set up (Rights Code to be Tested, Times of August 18) a beer parlor operator to test the code in the matter of the operator's refusal to serve people with long hair. In effect, the commission is prepared to compromise the operator's "human right" to use his discretion in running his establishment, in order to protect the patrons' "human right" to wear their hair long . . .

Surely, just as an employer must have discretionary powers to set standards of dress, deportment, punctuality, etc. for his staff, the operator of a public house must have the right to use his discretion in deciding what similar standards are acceptable in his establishment.

The commission has arranged a test case based on discrimination, but on a person's discretion, and in so doing has gone too far. They would be on more solid ground testing the Liquor Act, which discriminates against serving persons because of their age! — W. J. Johnson, Cobble Hill, B.C.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of August 25, 1915

According to a story that comes out of New York today, Tyrus Cobb has been offered $100,000 for three years' play by the Federal baseball league. The Feds say they are going to put a team in New York city next year and they want Cobb as a headliner. The Feds offer to give him $30,000 the day he signs. Now, Cobb gets $17,500 a year from Detroit and his contract has three years to run. The offer is such a whopper that it is no wonder he is giving it serious consideration.

One Man's Growth Industry Is Another's Pollution

By WILLIAM V. SHANNON
New York Times

The most sensitive and perplexing political problem confronting the United States is one that most politicians are understandably reluctant to talk about, much less act upon. It is how to maintain social harmony and, ideally, achieve greater social justice while also protecting the environment in the approaching period of modest economic growth.

Social justice, a healthy environment, and economic growth can all be thought of as desirable goals that do not conflict with one another. If one accepts that cheery view, there is no problem. A revived, rapidly growing economy generates added wealth.

From that wealth can come the capital investment needed to clean up the environment and also to improve the situation of the unemployed and the very poor. It is always easier to divide the social shares when one knows that this year's pie is going to be bigger than last year's, and that next year's will be still bigger.

But rapid growth in the U.S. and other industrial nations has depended in part on the substitution of machines for human labor, and this substitution in turn depended on inexpensive energy. The drastic rise in the price of oil and other fuel puts an unexpected constraint on growth.

At the same time, the preoccupation with unending growth has come under increasing ethical and environmental attack. In a mature society, growth relies in part on intensive advertising to keep the appetite for material goods constantly whetted.

People who have one automobile are persuaded that they "need" two, and those who have two television sets are persuaded that they "need" a third. This produces a creeping obsession with material goods that is warping and unlovely.

Even worse, from an ethical standpoint, millions of persons live in conditions of poverty that demean and demoralize. Although levels of production and consumption far exceed what is required to meet the basic requirements of a decent life for everyone, the benefits of the economic order fail to reach those who dwell, half-hidden, half-forgotten in the fetid slums and paper shacks of the "other America."

From an environmental standpoint, growth can make existing problems worse. Consider the two most depressed industries in America today — automobiles and housing. There cannot be really vigorous economic expansion unless both grow each year as they did prior to the recession.

But automobiles are the biggest contributor to the killer smogs which hung above East Coast cities in recent days and which repeatedly afflict Los Angeles. An environmentally-oriented transportation policy would work toward a substantial reduction in the number of automobiles on city and suburban streets.

Similarly, cheap credit for huge tracts of suburban houses would revive the construction industry, but would waste land and energy. An environmentally-oriented housing policy would promote row houses, apartment houses, and other multiple units and discourage one-family tract housing that leads to suburban sprawl.

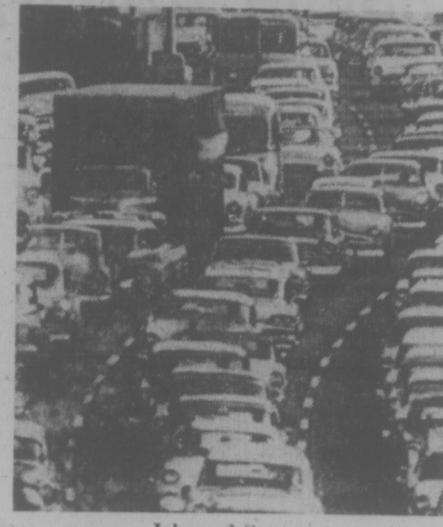

From the automobile industry to the housing contractors, from the industrial plant in Donora, Pennsylvania — scene of a famous killer smog in 1948 — to the paper mills that turn the upper Potomac River and many other rivers a sickening yellow, big polluters mean big payoffs. One man's growth is another man's waste and pollution.

It is a cruel choice to ask a young man whether he wants to give up his job today or his life 8, 20 or 30 years prematurely. Individuals, since they have to eat every day, usually choose the present over the future. Society as a whole can opt for the future, but only if it receives leadership.

Since politicians of every viewpoint know that businessmen want profits and workers want jobs, the safe course is to reach growth and hope the future will take care of itself.

Yet the limits to growth are real and will be seen by all in a very few years.

BETTER HIGHWAYS, HAPPIER PEOPLE?

By PAUL ST. PIERRE
The Sun

A group of Stewart citizens spent the weekend doing their own repairs on the road link to Hazelton and Terrace, having grown tired of waiting for the provincial government to do so.

One should not question such determination, such public spirit, such initiative, but one does.

Not everyone in Stewart may have sought their project through. The weekend road repair job is one short step on a long journey whose final destination may not be to everyone's taste.

After the weekend volunteer crews have completed their patching on that narrow little gravel road through the forest, we may expect that Highways Minister Graham Lea will find some way to renewing that highway construction project which lapsed. Political pressure usually produces some results.

Which is good, isn't it?

Well, yes. The 103 miles from Kitwanga to the Stewart-Cassiar junction and the 111 miles from Terrace to the junction will be a little smoother, a little wider, and a bit smoother.

But that, of course, won't be enough. The traffic will increase, the dust problem will get worse and people will demand and get chloride treatments.

Isn't that good?

Yes, it is. And so is the further widening, the further straightening, the re-routing, the new culverts and all the other improvements yet to be demanded.

A few more millions or tens of millions of dollars and driving from Stewart to the Yellowhead Highway won't be a day or even half a day and on the great day when the last of the blacktop is paved and painted, why, Stewart people will drive to Terrace for a Kiwanis lunch and come home for dinner and that must be good because everybody says so and everybody can't be wrong.

There are just one or two other features of highway improvement which might be mentioned.

There will be more serious accidents, not broken tires and windshields or smashed mufflers and tailpipes but the abattoir-style.

The birds and the animals will disappear from the roadside.

Those who have breakdowns will have to sit by the roadside until the wrecker, the police, the B.C. Automobile Association or some other official vehicle comes by. The busier the highway the less aid and comfort is offered to the stranded.

People will lock their cars when they leave them, even for 10 or 15 minutes.

Policemen who tend to be tolerant about bush road drivers will introduce them, abruptly, to radar, mechanical checks and the breathalyzer. Each will be quite a revelation to some of the old-timers whose driving habits haven't hurt anybody in the preceding 50 years.

There will be tens of thousands and then hundreds of thousands of tourists. Not all tourists are lovable.

The birds and the animals will disappear from the roadside.

Those who have breakdowns will have to sit by the roadside until the section of road for fun, my viewpoint is warped. Would I want the road improved if I had to travel it once a month or oftener, for business? You bet your sweet life I would, Charlie.)

ADDED SAFETY FACTOR?

The Case for Bilingual Airports

By MARJORIE NICHOLS

OTTAWA — Given a skilled pathologist and a chilled black heart, it is difficult enough to persuade the jury that the deceased was a bigot. When the corpse is still sucking air and speaking, as in the case of Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, the task is even more challenging.

The issue in this case is language — the two official Canadian languages, English and French. If one accepts the word of the pilots on faith (which is the basis upon which we usually accept the word of pilots) the use of the French language poses a threat to the well-being of the Canadian air-travelling public.

Last year, the federal department of transport embarked on an experiment. At five small, selected airports in the province of Quebec it was decreed that French would be an acceptable second language. The first language would, of course, be English.

According to the rules of the experiment, French-speaking pilots flying into these five airports can request instructions from the control tower in French. Imagine that. A French-Canadian pilot receiving instructions, in French in French Canada.

If the concept does not sound dangerous, you obviously have been on vacation for the past 10 days. At a convention in Vancouver during the first week in August, a spokesman for the air line pilot's association disclosed that this experiment in bilingualism constituted a genuine health hazard.

He said that on seven documented occasions since Ottawa authorized this dangerous experiment, pilots flying within the province of Quebec have been confronted with this language hazard. The hazard allegedly derives from the fact that the English-speaking pilots are unable to understand the instructions being given by the control towers to the French-speaking pilots who have chosen to exercise their option to speak French.

Indeed, it does sound dangerous. But if you side with the (English-speaking) pilots in their planned one-day protest strike to force Ottawa to abolish the experiment, you should coincidentally swear off flying in any non-English-speaking country as well.

According to the International Civil Aviation Organization, the rules are these: In most nations of the world, the language of the control tower is the language of the nation, whether it be Portuguese or Swahili.

It would, of course, be ridiculous to require that the pilots of the world possess intimate knowledge of a couple of dozen languages. So, it was decided that where a pilot does not know the local language he can request that English be used. English is, no doubt about it, the language of international air travel.

Simply stated, the Ottawa experiment provides French-speaking Canadian pilots with the same rights and privileges as they would enjoy as foreigner in another country.

They can ask for an exception to the rule to address them in a language they understand — French.

The spokesman for the concerned (English-speaking) pilots no doubt would have raised it had the opportunity.

But he neglected to conjecture about the potential for increased safety that the Ottawa experiment provides by allowing French-speaking pilots to fly in their own language.

You are the jury. You decide. You have a professional English-speaking pilot on a 747 heading into an airport in Quebec. At the same time you have two, non-professional French-speaking pilots in little Cessnas approaching the airport.

The pilot of the 747 receives his instructions in English, which he understands well.

The pilots of the Cessnas also receive their instructions in English, which they don't understand so well. Is this more or less dangerous than a French-speaking pilot?

The law of averages alone

dictates that stupidity be fore at Toronto's airport. Perhaps Maley would take the time to provide the Toronto Star with a few more of these interesting stories.

There are only two questions here: First, should we continue to refuse French-

Canadian pilots the right (?)

to employ their mother tongue

as a second language?

And second, are those English-speaking pilots who fly

domestic routes really so inferior to their colleagues who fly international routes that we should continue to give them special dispensation?

Hitting the Road to Nowhere

The number of jobs a person can perform for himself grows smaller every year. This is because of the famous increasing complexity of 20th century society. Not too long ago, for example, an ordinary person could repair his own automobile, a task which now requires three appointments with a service manager and the ministrations of sundry specialists, an automotive geriatrics, carburetor cardiology and front end orthopedics.

To file any but the simplest income tax form now requires the services of an accountant. If a lot of the income is unskilled, you probably need a firm of tax lawyers, since the tax code has become so Byzantine in its complexity that no two persons, including the experts, can agree how much tax is due from a given income, and you are, consequently, always in danger of winding up in the law courts.

The rule is that the simple becomes complex, the complex becomes uninterpretable, and the unintelligible becomes litigation. Already in many states, it is possible to end up in a court brawl over auto repair, in which the outcome hinges on the interpretation of the validity of estimate vouchers, issued by your garage for replacing the ashtray.

One result of all this is a radical increase in the number of experts needed to accomplish simple tasks. And the result of this, of course, is a sharp rise in the cost of doing jobs that could once be done at no cost whatever.

Consider the once-simple business of buying an airline ticket to Europe. A woman I know decided to do this very thing last spring, and almost did.

She had done it several times in the old days and began to do it the old way. She phoned an airline, ordered a seat for a given date and told the clerk she would come around in a few days to pay for the ticket.

She did not want to visit either Bessarabia or Tunis, but she asked if there were alternatives. There was nothing but alternatives. By joining a set of snake handlers, she could profit from a fantastic charter rate, which would go even lower if the Dow Jones stock market average rose more than three points on the third day after the first full moon of her European visit.

She chose to fly caged in a wooden box strapped to the wing of a 747 and agreed not to eat the airline meal . . .

"Stop!" she cried. "I need expert advice."

She retained a firm of travel consultants, which agreed to refine all the possible airline options down to 20, which might fit her vacation aims and purse. After the first several weeks required to complete this task, she studied the 20 possibilities and noted that all were hedged about with such fine legal type that she might end up in court being sued for large sums by her airline if, say, she forgot to go to Florence and eat veal cacciatore or wore a plaid skirt in Vienna.

It was obvious that she needed a lawyer, perhaps five or six lawyers. She already had three lawyers arguing about how much income tax she would have to pay next year, and five lawyers suing an auto repair shop for trying to charge her for installing a new windshield wiper blade without giving the legally required advance notification on her repair estimate.

She went to her tax accountant. She had been forced to hire him to advise her what kind of work to do and what to avoid in order to minimize her tax liability. He told her she couldn't afford the additional lawyers it would require for her to buy an airline ticket.

She cancelled the trip and decided, instead, to vacation at Rust Hills, N.J., which she could reach by bus. She is there now, but she is not having a very good time. Last week the refrigerator in her rented cottage quit working, and when she went to the landlord to ask to have it repaired, he said he had a better idea.

The warranty had not yet run out on that refrigerator, he said, and he would sue the manufacturer for non-compliance with its terms unless the refrigerator was replaced by November.

The manufacturer has told him to go ahead and sue, and he will, but not for several months. His lawyer is tied up this summer trying to buy him an airplane ticket.

Second Captured Shark Dies in Aquarium Pool

VANCOUVER (CP) — The second of three six-gilled sharks captured last week in Georgia Strait by an expedition from the Vancouver Public Aquarium died Sunday.

Chris Angus, the aquarium director's executive assistant, said a post mortem on the death of the immature male shark was not completed, but said the shark probably died from general weakness and the trauma of capture. The shark was 10 feet long and weighed 350 pounds.

The largest of the sharks captured, a 400-pound, 10-foot male died shortly after reaching the aquarium. It had suffered shark bites to its gills and other wounds during capture.

The survivor is an eight-foot, 250-pound female. Angus said she was doing better from the start than the immature male.

Another official said the shark was still on public view but had been separated further from the public. The official said some people had dabbed their fingers in the water and disturbed the animals.

Angus said that the second shark did not die from internal injuries suffered during transfer. He said the animals were carefully lifted in slings to give equal support to all parts of their bodies, and a post mortem on the first shark revealed no evidence of ruptures.

After the capture the shark had equilibrium problems, possibly caused by air ingested during transferral. Aquarium staff had been walking the sharks around the pool so they would not go belly-up. The sharks are not being handled now.

Mrs. Leonard Wright, president of the Aquarium Association, said no plans were made for permanent display of the sharks because they were not expected to live long. The primitive six-gilled sharks feed on the ocean floor at depths as great as 1,800 feet.

MANNING PARK CAMPERS WAKE TO WET SNOW

MANNING PARK (CP) — Residents and campers at this resort area along the Hope-Princeton Highway 110 miles east of Vancouver woke up to wet snow Saturday.

A highways department spokesman said about 3½ inches fell in Allison Pass at the 4,200-foot level where the Manning Park Lodge is located, but the highway was wet and bare by afternoon.

A provincial parks branch employee said about two inches of snow fell in the area of the park's four campgrounds but was unable to say how many campers were in the popular area.

The highways department spokesman said graders weren't called out and no one was stuck as a result of the snowfall but the highway was closed 32 miles east of Hope by a small mudslide that followed the snow.

Youth Awarded $2M Damages

PONT ORCHARD, Wash. (UPI) — A 20-year-old youth who was shot and paralyzed from the neck down during an argument four years ago has been awarded $2 million damages — and his parents an additional $350,000 — after a 10-day trial here.

The decision came after a $65,000 out-of-court settlement was set aside and a new trial ordered.

A civil court jury deliberated for six hours Saturday before reaching its decision to award the $2 million to Glenn Morgan and the additional $350,000 to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Morgan.

The younger Morgan and his parents had sued Mr. and Mrs. Horace Burks, Henry Harlow and Burks' mother, the owners and directors of Burks-Harlow Corp., a mobile park where the shooting occurred.

Morgan, 16 at the time, and Burks, the manager of the park, got into an argument over the teen-ager driving his motorcycle on the park grounds and during the altercation the youth was shot.

Burks originally was found guilty of a misdemeanor and fined $250 in criminal court.

Morgan and his parents, meantime, filed a suit in civil court.

The case appeared to be ended when the Morgans' attorney reached an agreement for a $65,000 settlement, but that was set aside by the court on grounds the attorney had made an error.

The result was a new trial and the $2 million award to Morgan.

During the trial, Morgan's attorney contended Burks shot his client, who was astride his motorcycle, as he bent down to remove the keys from the two-wheeler. Burks' attorney said Morgan was the attacker and the gun went off accidentally, when it fell to the ground during a scuffle.

DO-IT-YOURSELF ROAD JOB

STEWART (CP) — About 300 persons worked together Sunday to repair sections of a road out of this northwestern British Columbia town.

The people were doing work they say should be done by the provincial department of highways. Stewart is about 500 miles north of Vancouver near the B.C.-Alaska border.

Mary Schindel, co-ordinator of a committee called Operations North, said that about four miles of road, 60 miles south of here, was covered with crushed rock several inches deep.

She said men, women and children ranging in age from four years old to mid-70s, worked, assisted by heavy equipment operated by townsmen.

The action resulted from the provincial government cancelling a contract that would have improved the road linking Stewart with Smithers, Terrace and Prince Rupert.

The townsmen are prepared to return," Mrs. Schindel said Sunday, but said she will contact Premier Dave Barrett and ask him to contact out the repair work to local heavy equipment operators.

The government awarded the contract nine months ago but cancelled it recently when Mid-West Construction Ltd. failed to provide a performance bond.

Mrs. Schindel said that even if she gets no answer from the government people are still prepared to go back and fix the road themselves.

Trapped Robbers Escape

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police say that two safecrackers escaped Sunday while the revolver-wielding CNR policeman who had caught them was calling for help.

City police found drills, punches, a chisel and other safecracking tools at the CNR express office after, they say in their report, "a communications breakdown occurring within the CNR" caused a delay of several minutes in their arrival to help at the correct address.

The CNR constable said he was making a routine check on the premises when he noticed the safecracking in process. One safecracker darted to freedom before he could be caught.

The other two had broken a second floor window and were preparing to jump out when the constable ordered them back into the room.

He told city police he walked about 10 feet to a telephone to report the crime when one of the robbers dashed out the front door.

The other man tried to grab the tools which were in a nylon bag but failed before he ran down an interior staircase to his freedom.

The CNR constable gave chase to the two robbers but failed to catch them.

A CNR spokesman said that about $2,000 to $3,000 in cash and some blank money orders was in the safe.

Poor on the March, UN Chief Warns

BRANDON (CP) — Within the next 10 or 15 years mankind is going to have to "make the leap to a planetary society" or face the prospect of ultimate destruction, said Maurice Strong, Sunday at the opening of the 1975 United Nations' high school seminar.

Strong, executive director of the UN Environment program (UNEP) with headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, told the 300 people in attendance that "the world's poor are on the march."

He said the industrialized West is going to have to admit Third World countries into an equitable world system of trade, politics and wealth distribution.

The Oak Lake, Man., native told his audience that the UN, having "fallen into lower repute with the public than ever before in its history," is failing in the next few months a special session of the assembly that is "probably the most important in its 30-year life."

During weekend meetings with mayors and councils at Terrace, Kitimat and Smithers, Bennett said a Social Credit government would establish a formula to distribute revenues to British Columbia municipalities, with an extra share going to northern communities.

In a prepared statement issued Sunday, Bennett, who is on a month-long tour of the province, said sharing power is the only way to avoid the costs of big government.

"Centralized government is a menace to the provincial taxpayer and even more importantly it destroys the self-determination of municipal government."

He told a meeting Sunday that a Social Credit government would "be prepared to listen to groups within the community who wish to design and have financial support for alternative systems of education."

That will provide for more equitable resource and wealth sharing.

It is now that the Western industrialized nations, up until recently, enjoyed command of the world.

"What we're seeing at the UN now, however, is the rule of the majority — democracy — for the first time."

Strong, who first joined the UN service in 1947, said that the emergence of China, a poor but powerful member of the organization, and the proliferation of Third World countries is turning the tide at the UN.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Newfoundland remained without cross-province ground passenger service today as a strike by its 43 Canadian National bus drivers entered its second day.

Rain Drenches East, Strands Zoo Animals

Rains heavier than Hurricane Hazel in 1954 drenched south-western Ontario on Saturday night and early Sunday.

A spokesman for the Grand River Conservation Authority said minor flooding is expected to continue along the Nith — swollen to 9½ feet above its normal level through Ayr, Plattsburgh and Paris until midnight Monday night.

Heaviest rainfall during the weekend was reported in the Orangeville and Mount Forest miles west of Kitchener. No damage estimates were available.

"We've had storm sewer back pressure blow streets 10 feet into the air, actually."

"Houses along the streets are flooded and now we are having massive looting. We've called in the entire police auxiliary and we still don't have enough manpower. We can still use all the help we can get."

LEBLANC FAVORS TALKS

HALIFAX (CP) — Negotiations with other nations will continue to be the federal policy on gaining control of offshore fish stocks, despite the unanimous request of Canada's premiers for unilateral declaration of a 200-mile limit, federal Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said Sunday.

"It is easy for the provincial premiers to call for unilateral declaration of a 200-mile fishing zone but they do not have to sit in the House of Commons and answer questions. I do," LeBlanc said in a telephone interview.

Canada had begun negotiations with other countries for a fishery management zone extending 200 miles offshore and that position would be pursued to the end.

"What that end will be, nobody knows. It may very well follow that no other choice is left but to declare the zone unilaterally," he said.

LeBlanc was responding to a resolution call made Friday by the provincial premiers at their annual meeting in St. John's, Nfld.

The premiers sent a telegram to Prime Minister Trudeau urging immediate unilateral action to impose the fishing zone as a means of protecting fish stocks.

LeBlanc said he could defend such a territorial claim. It seemed unlikely Canada could thereby "reduce the fishing effort of other nations."

Fish Boats Sail

VANCOUVER (CP) — A month-long strike against the Fisheries Association of British Columbia ended Sunday when members of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union began fishing.

Union Secretary Jack Nichol said Sunday there were no problems getting the fleet back to work.

Most of the Fraser River sockeye salmon run was lost during the strike, but a few pinkies have entered the river, he said.

Pickets were removed Thursday after union members accepted, on the fourth attempt, a contract offer. The settlement will increase the price paid to fishermen for sockeye—the tasty, red salmon most sought by consumers — to 62 cents a pound from 52 cents, pinkies to 24 cents from 22, chums to 20 from 24 to 27 cents and large red springers to 68 cents from 65 cents.

Shoreworkers, who accepted the contract and voted Aug. 7 to return to work, will receive an increase of $1.10 an hour on a base rate of $4.76 and tendersmen's salaries will increase $17.9 a month for a 14-day month.

Union president Homer Stevens, in announcing Friday that the 3,800 fishermen had voted 58.9 per cent for the one-year contract, said the members accepted the offer because their strike was losing effect.

The strike was marred by B.C. Supreme Court injunctions restricting picketing, the first issued in a labor dispute since the B.C. Labor Code was approved in 1973, and by a breakdown in relations between the union and the 2,400-member Native Brotherhood of B.C. The brotherhood represents Indian fishermen.

GOLDEN AGE DAY/PNE WEDNESDAY!

An old couple did come from Namiu,
To enjoy our marvellous tattoo,
The pipers did blow,
As the marchers did go,
And the drummers went ra-ta-tattoo!

After, they laughed when we said,
Shouldn't you two be home in bed?
They gave us a wink,
Said, you're as young as you think,
And went off to Playland instead!

You're Fired . . . This Is a Recording

WINDSOR, Ont. — The entire on-air staff of Windsor radio station CJOM-FM has been fired . . . by a tape recording.

A recorded message played at a staff meeting said station officials want to re-structure the rhythm-and-blues entertainment provided by the station.

The fired employees said the message came as a complete surprise.

"It was very sudden," said Paul Nathan, a disc jockey.

"There wasn't even a letter of explanation."

"They just played a minute-long tape recording, gave me the envelope containing health and unemployment insurance slips and severance pay and said goodbye."

Idi Seeks Soviet Arms To Fight White Africa

Wayne

Revson

NAIROBI, Kenya — Idi Amin of Uganda will visit the Soviet Union to seek arms for liberation fighters in southern Africa, his Uganda Broadcasting Corp. reported today. The broadcast said Amin has asked the Soviet government to increase military and financial aid to the liberation movements. Amin has pledged that he personally will lead a black invasion of white-ruled Rhodesia and South Africa within the year.

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — John Wayne is suffering from a staph infection, not a recurrence of cancer, a family spokesman says. Wayne, 68, was reported resting comfortably at Hoag Memorial Hospital after a series of "routine tests" and treatment of a cough. The drawing cowboy actor has the lower half of his left lung removed in 1964. After his recovery he insisted, "I got the Big C loked."

KENSETT, Ark. — Wilbur Mills has gone before a special five-member Masonic state commission for a trial that could lead to his removal from the fraternal order. Reports indicated the trial was called in connection with Mills' self-proclaimed alcoholism and public escapades with stripper Fanne Foxe.

NEW YORK — Charles Revson, who built a small nail polish manufacturing business into one of the world's largest cosmetics empires, died in hospital Sunday of cancer. He was 68. The son of a cigar-maker, in 1932, Revson quit a job as a cosmetic salesman and formed Revlon Inc. Summing up his phenomenal business success, Revson once said: "I'm no genius. I'm just a normal individual that's sensitive."

LOS ANGELES — John Denver is suing Pepsi Cola Co., charging a soft drink advertising campaign using his name has damaged his career and future earnings. Denver claims the campaign for Mountain Dew had cost him as much as $1.5 million in future earnings. The action stems from a promotion which offered $1 off on Denver albums purchased at a record store chain.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa — The search for Kimberly Hinsenbrock ended when authorities found the 18-year-old had joined the U.S. Army instead of getting married. Miss Hinsenbrock disappeared last Tuesday after leaving her parents' home to visit her fiancé and make final arrangements for their wedding on Saturday.

HAYWARD, Calif. — Ed Archer and his wife Karen almost never go out at night or on weekends unless they're wearing authentic early 20th century garb and driving a Model T Ford. "I love that era so much I want to live exactly as if I was alive then," says Archer, 35. "It seems to me people back then were more friendly, less cut-throat, and you weren't regarded as a freak if you didn't drink or smoke." When Archer and his wife go out on the town, they take their pick from 41 antique autos and Archer says "I would guess I've driven about 200,000 miles in Model Ts and only been towed home three times."

HOUSTON — There is a better than even chance America's oldest astronaut, Donald ("Deke") Slayton, has cancer; but, because of early detection and action he may yet fly in space again. A lesion, the size of a pencil eraser, was discovered on Slayton's X-rays by doctors following the joint Soyuz-Apollo spaceflight last month.

More Data Sought On TV Violence

KINGSTON, Ont. — Public concern about violence on television is growing constantly but more needs to be known about its effects and means of control, Pierre Juneau, chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission (CRTC), said Sunday.

He spoke at the opening of a 2½-day seminar sponsored by the CRTC at Queen's University, attended by leaders of the broadcasting industry, government officials, writers and leading university research workers in the social sciences.

Juneau, whose agency licenses and sets program standards for the broadcast industry, said the CRTC has considered having a formal public inquiry into the subject but believes more fundamental knowledge is needed first.

The seminar, drawing about 100 participants, was shown a National Film Board documentary on congressional hearings held in Washington in 1972 concerning a surgeon-general's report which declared television violence is harmful to children.

At the conclusion of the hearings, the U.S. networks agreed to collaborate in reducing the amount of violence shown on television gratuitously.

The best advice was to have parents watch shows with their children so they could cut off objectionable shows or at least interpret them for their children.

Insects Seen from 2 Miles

KITCHENER, Ont. (CP) — Dr. Glen Schaefer can spot an insect two miles away and can even tell its sex.

Dr. Schaefer, who established an international reputation as a nuclear scientist before he was 30, manages his insect spotting with the use of radar.

His research now is establishing him in a second career and has brought an entirely different perspective to projects involving pests that range from the African locusts to the spruce budworm in New Brunswick forests.

Dr. Schaefer's work is providing new clues as to why persistent and expensive annual pesticide attacks have failed to bring the spruce budworm under control. Part of the answer is that the insects travel much faster and farther than biologists had thought.

Dr. Schaefer pinpointed their range by radar-tracking equipment and he thinks the insects should be attacked in flight rather than on the ground.

He calculated the pesticide could be laid down, much like a fish net, in the path of the horde of insects. The idea was tried this year in New Brunswick but full results are not yet known.

Dr. Schaefer's practical research with insects is the result of his curiosity to find out how birds managed to migrate the 2,000 miles across the Mediterranean Sea.

His radar approach to tracing the migration of birds proved so successful that within a few months he was offered a number of research projects.

By the early 1960s he was travelling to international scientific conferences to discuss birds instead of the mathematical equations he developed and which today form the basis for the development of many nuclear reactors.

Locusts were the first of the insects he tackled beginning in 1968.

Dr. Schaefer learned they can travel up to 400 miles a night, riding the strong push of a jetstream of high altitudes. Before his research, scientists thought locusts travelled only short distances into the wind.

More important, Dr. Schaefer found that high-altitude winds tended to converge and sweep locusts into a mass, often as long as 100 miles in a front that would be one mile deep and one mile wide.

Dr. Schaefer and Father Willard check tree

His radar-tracking research could spot a locust as far as two miles away, and by measuring the speed of the wing beat he could tell the difference between a male and a female.

Dr. Schaefer, a native of Kitchener, now works out of the Cranfield Institute of Technology in Cranfield, England. He talked about his work during an interview while visiting his home town.

He and his team of eight scientists tried flying their radar sets in planes this year, aiming the equipment groundward to follow the flight of moths. Dr. Schaefer said the experiment appears to have worked well.

As part of their project, the team has developed new and more sensitive radar sets which put their equipment into the forefront of radar research.

Within five years, Dr. Schaefer said he may leave his insect research and plunge into metaphysics—another hobby which has taken hold of his curiosity.

MAJOR CHANGE FOR CHINESE

HONG KONG (UPI) — China is preparing to move into a new stage in one of her most ambitious, most difficult, and most significant reform programs — romanization of the written Chinese language.

Reform of the difficult, ideographic language has been a high priority project since the Communists came to power almost 26 years ago.

"The written language must be reformed," party chairman Mao Tse-Tung said in 1951. "The common direction of phoneticization for all written languages in the world must be followed."

China's top brains began work on the task following the year, and in 1958 Premier Chou En-Lai outlined three stages for the reform program.

First was a reduction of the number of characters in use and simplification of their written form.

Next was popularization of a common speech, or dialect, based on Peking pronunciation and called "Pu Tung Hua", in preparation for the alphabetization of written Chinese. "Pu Tung Hua" is essentially the same as the Mandarin, or North China, dialect.

Although the first two stages are far from completed, the third stage begins this September.

This is the formal switch to widespread use of the phonetic alphabet, which has been in use in schools for several years. It also has been in general use, such as store and shop signs and other public places, on a limited basis for several years.

The romanized version is used along with the regular Chinese characters now. The ultimate aim is to eliminate the characters.

This is a project that will take more than a few years or a few decades. It will take generations.

Kuo Mo-Jo, president of the Chinese academy of sciences, said "A long transition period must precede phoneticization of the Chinese characters."

If China pursues this reform program aggressively, Kuo said, eventually "the use of the Chinese characters will, like the ancient Greek, Latin and Sanskrit languages, be limited to a small number of specialists."

There are more than 30,000 characters in the Chinese ideographic language. Writing these is like drawing a picture, which is the way the language evolved over the past 4,000 years.

About 5,000 characters are in common use, and a person must memorize at least 1,500 to be considered literate. The number in common use is being reduced steadily. The aim is to have fewer than 3,000, about the number that have been simplified so far.

The transliteration of Chinese characters that has been in use for many years in the west is based on a system devised mainly by missionary scholars.

The new system in China is considerably different. For instance, in the transliteration of cities, Peking (old) is Beijing (new), Tientsin is Tian Jin, and Chungking is Zhong Qing.

The advantages of romanization and the need for it were stated by one of the scholars working on the program years ago:

"The purpose of reforming the Han (Chinese) written language is to make it easy to learn, convenient to use, and capable of meeting the requirements of the modern age of atomic energy, supersonic airplanes and electronic computers."

Spill Dissipates

ASTORIA, Ore. (AP) — Aerial inspection of an oil spill near the mouth of the Columbia River, showed it to be smaller than first reported, the coast guard said Sunday.

Earlier in the day, the coast guard said diesel oil from a capsized fishing vessel had caused a slick two miles long and 30 miles wide.

A spokesman said Sunday night, however, all that could be seen from the air were several spills about 50 yards in diameter, and those were expected to dissipate soon.

A 65-foot vessel, Mister Jay, ran aground Saturday night on a sand bar about seven miles upstream from the mouth of the river.

Its two occupants, Larry Young and Davir Kniss, were rescued by small boats from a coast guard cutter, anchored nearby. The boat is owned by Paul Anderson of Seattle.

Bakers Advance to Final

By D'ARCY KAVANAGH

Times Staff

It was only fitting that the largest crowd to show up for a Victoria McDonald's home game in two years got just what it wanted.

A total of 1,917 fans watched the Bakers stage a furious third-period rally to defeat Richmond - Roadrunners 10-7 in a thrilling, well-played contest at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Roadrunners forced the final game of the best-of-seven Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League semi-final with a 14-12 triumph over Victoria Saturday in Richmond.

The series triumph marked the first time in the last four years that the Bakers have eliminated Richmond in playoff action.

McDonalds now advance to the best-of-seven final against Burnaby - Cablevision. The first game will be Tuesday in New Westminster's Queen's Park Arena with the second back here Thursday.

Although they were outplayed, the Roadrunners came close to winning Sunday's contest mainly on the work of goalie John Lewis.

got two goals and two assists from Norm Baker and single tallies from Bob Cool, Dave Lowden, Ken King, Steve Cochrane and junior "B" calup Tej Labh.

Rico Bellusci took the lead to beat Victoria goalie Al Radley more than once as he fired three goals and added a pair of assists.

Frank Nielsen, Joe Marullo, Len Ciminielli and Davinder Deol had the other Richmond goals.

Saturday, the Roadrunners overcame a 4-3 first-period deficit to take an 11-9 second-period edge.

Besides Alexander, Victoria

Bellusci topped Richmond with five goals, four of them in the second-period flurry, while Ciminielli and Ray Durante each scored three times. Tim Kelly, Dave Cochrane and Marullo added singles.

King was the top Victoria marksman with four goals while Mike Bryson, Cool and Alexander had two apiece.

Lorry Goeckner and Norm Baker had the other goals with Baker adding seven assists.

Lewis made 49 saves for Richmond while Radley and Mickey Michaux combined for 33 stops for Victoria.

Geiberger Warms Up In Texas

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — Al Geiberger defeated Dave Stockton Sunday to win the $250,000 Tournament Players golf championship.

Geiberger nearly bypassed the Fort Worth tournament because of the blazing Texas heat and other considerations.

It was literally a duel in the sun with Geiberger shooting a 69 for a record 270 total and a three-shot victory over Stockton. The win was worth $50,000.

Stockton also shot a closing 69, but was a 32-37 compared with Geiberger's 36-33.

Stockton was amazed at Geiberger's performance.

"If someone told me I was going to be seven under par on this course and not win . . . he said, his voice trailing in bewilderment.

For the record, which erased the 30-year-old mark of 272 by Clayton Hefner, it was 66-68-67-69-270, with a sizzling 63 in Wednesday's pro-am event.

Although largely overlooked, Hubert Green closed with a 69 for third place. His 273, while five shots off the lead, was six shots better than the trio in fourth place: Mason Rudolph, Bob Dickson and Bob Murphy.

Jack Nicklaus, who won the tournament a year ago at Atlanta, finished 18 strokes back at 288.

George Knudsen of Toronto, the only Canadian in the tournament, failed to qualify for the final.

Rankin Triumphs

LITTLETON, Colo. (AP) — Judy Rankin, notwithstanding a charge from Sandra Haynie and Jane Blalock, broke a year-long victory drought Sunday by winning a $4,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Mrs. Rankin, putting more consistently than she has all year, birdied three of four holes during one stretch on the back nine to post a final round of one-under-par 71.

Her 207 total was worth $5,700 and provided a two-stroke victory over both Miss Haynie and Miss Blalock. The two runners-up won $3,685 each.

Jan Stephenson shot a closing 72 for a 210 total, worth $2,600. Tied at 211 were JoAnne Carner, Kathy Whitworth, 19-year-old tour rookie Amy Alcott and Kathy McMullen.

Sandra Post, formerly of Oakville, Ont., had a closing 69 for a 214 total and took home $1,050. Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan Falls, Que., finished with a 73 for a 222 total and $151.

Rankin, 21, won the tournament after a few anxious moments on the 52nd, par-five 18th when he drove into the trees on the right side of the fairway, then hit a five-iron into the rough about 80 yards short of the green. However, he salvaged the situation with a wedge to the green and a clutch birdie putt from seven feet away.

Wells attempted to sent the tournament into extra holes, but just missed a 12-foot birdie putt on the 18th after scoring birdies on both the 16th and 17th.

Track Team Picked

SUDBURY, Ont. — Four Vancouver Island athletes have been proposed as members of Canada's team for the Pan-American Games at Mexico City in October. Selected by the Canadian Track and Field Association following Sunday's completion of the national championships here, the team requires approval of the Pan-American Games committee.

Joyce Yakubowich, Debbie Brill and Murray Keating of Victoria were picked for the team along with Nanaimo's Phil Olsen, winner of the javelin title at the national meet.

Mrs. Yakubowich was selected to compete in the 200 and 400-metre events and with a relay squad; Miss Brill was picked as a high-jumper, and Keating who set a Canadian record in winning the title Friday, was named for the hammer-throw.

Mrs. Yakubowich, won the 200 metres Saturday with a time of 23.5 seconds and Miss Brill was second in the high jump behind Louise Walker of Toronto.

Robert Dolan was the only Victoria athlete to finish in the top six during Sunday's events. Dolan placed fifth in the 400 metres, won by Brian Saunders of Ontario in 46.3 seconds.

Among highlights of the team proposals was the naming of Saskatoon sisters Diane and Joanne Jones.

Diane, a high school teacher, set a Canadian record in the pentathlon event Sunday at the championships. Diane, who represented Canada in 1972 Olympics, was also chosen as a long-jumper.

Joanne, a novice in international competition, was also proposed for the pentathlon after finishing fourth Sunday.

The proposed women's team will form the nucleus of the national team in Friday's international meet here against East Germany.

Sunday's action also included a Canadian record-breaking performance by Francine Gendron of Montreal, who covered the 400-metre hurdles in 53.2 seconds.

Rick Cuttell of Toronto posted a long-jump win Saturday with his high-jump victory Friday and Hugh Fraser of Ottawa won the 200-metre race Saturday after a victory in the 100-metre Friday to round out the top performances of the meet at Laurentian University.

A Father and a Son: It's Never Forgotten

Of all the major regrets of living, I suppose, the most poignant is the omission made by so many of us who neglected to tell our fathers that they were admired, respected and loved.

We take it so much for granted when we're young that a father will have a profound influence on our lives that, all too often, a man may reach middle age or beyond before it comes to him that his old man was a wonderful guy. That such an awareness may arrive long after the father is no longer around to hear it is surely one of life's sadder moments. We communicate this affection in many positive ways to our mothers. It is rarely said directly to a father.

I have been thinking along these lines because of a beautiful and touching letter that I've had from Dr. Hugh L. Keenleyside, a man I count as one of the finest I've known. There is a line in Dr. Keenleyside's note — "I had shared a great experience with an admired friend" — that I'll long treasure as the perfect expression of an ideal son-to-father relationship.

A passing note here about picking blueberries atop Grouse Mountain had struck a nostalgic chord with Dr. Keenleyside and I think his reminiscences speaks for themselves.

"As a small boy in the early years of this century I lived in Vancouver," he writes. "When I was six or seven my father, realizing that I had never climbed Grouse, offered to take me and a number of boys from my Sunday School class for a picnic on the mountain."

"Early in the morning we crossed the Inlet (now the harbour) on the old North Vancouver ferry — the little ship-shaped vessel, not one of the great, flat-ended ferries that came later. On the North Shore we took one of the two old single-track street cars that alternated in running a couple of miles up and down Lonsdale Avenue. We rode to the end of the line and then started up the rough dirt road on foot."

"After a mile or so the road ended and we started to climb up a narrow, rocky, root-crossed path. It was not climbing, as the word is usually used, but the trail was steep and the day soon became warm. We went on and on, resting every 10 minutes or so to catch our breath or to take a drink from one of the many streams we had to cross."

"After a couple of hours we were getting pretty tired and Father inquired of a man coming down the trail how far we were from the top. 'Oh,' he answered, 'about another half mile.' Cheered by this estimate we went on with revived hope. But by the time we had climbed for another hour Father asked a party descending noisily and cheerfully from the top how far we had yet to climb. We were not enthused by the reply: 'about half mile more.' However, in response to Father's comment 'Well, come on, boys, we are at least holding our own' we emulated Excelsior and after a bit reached the plateau."

"Far below the city and the waters from the North Arm to Vancouver Island glittered in the noonday sun. Around us the evergreens, wild flowers and dense undergrowth gave a fresh tang to the air. But more important — because by this time we were ravenously hungry — was the fact that everywhere we looked around our rocky outcrop were bushes loaded, bending over, with enormous indigo colored berries. I had never before tasted a blueberry."

"And never have I had such a lunch. In later years I have been fortunate in having had opportunities to enjoy the expertise of many of the world's famous restaurants. None of them could equal the sandwich sandwiches of crusty, home-made bread, the cold mountain water, and the juicy succulence of the blueberries on the top of Grouse Mountain. Luciferus with his larks' tongues, and honey from Hymetus, never had an experience like ours. The nectar and ambrosia fed to the Gods on Mount Olympus could not match the blueberries and sardines on Mount Grouse!"

"Eventually, replete, having satisfied our mouths with good things, and our youth having been renewed like the eagle's, we stumbled down the mountain and returned happily to our homes. But at least for me the memory never faded."

Dr. Keenleyside's fresh memory of a day 70-odd years in the past, is not at all surprising. I would guess that every man has some remembered incident in his youth, some shared experience with a father, that survives intact long after other remembrances of the past have gone.

I don't know about Hugh, but think in most cases this comes from the surprising discovery that a father is also a human being. My own memories go back before any concept of the so-called generation gap, but a father was known as a disciplinarian, a man with the weight of the world or, at least, his little, depression-ridden slice of it, upon his shoulders, someone to look up to as a voice of authority and leadership.

And so when I think about my father I almost always see him poling out on a crude raft up at the First Lake on Hollyburn Ridge, or introducing us to Pollock Pogue, who lived in complete disarray in a cabin at the Old Mill and who made me a yew bow that I treasured for years, or teaching us to camp at Albert Canyon, so near the transcontinental railway tracks that when the train came through it seemed to swallow us whole.

These were the times when I found that my father loved to laugh, that he loved to share the outdoors with us and became, indeed, a boy like us when he dropped the mantle of duty. I never told him, not having the words, what this meant to me. All I can hope is that, somehow, he knew.

$80,000 Grant For Symphony

DI CASTRI

The Victoria Symphony Society has received double the Canada Council grant it received in 1974 but less than the amount for which it applied.

Board chairman John Di Castri said today it will receive $80,000, compared to $30,000 in 1974. A total of $97,000 had been requested.

Meanwhile, it was announced Saturday that symphony manager John Roffey resigned Aug. 15, three days after the board had decided to ask for his resignation.

Roffey was unavailable for comment today.

Di Castri said Roffey's resignation was not part of a "witch hunt or vendetta". He said the board wanted to revamp the organization without a manager for a while.

Di Castri said a small committee of board members would do managerial duties until a new manager was appointed. A committee is drawing up terms of reference for a new manager and the position will be advertised across Canada shortly, Di Castri said.

He wants to go from semi-professional orchestra to a more professional one," Di Castri said. "We want a broader approach to the whole business."

He said applicants for the symphony manager post would have to have "professional symphony background".

Roffey, who has indicated he will talk about his dismissal later, has been manager for nearly two years. In the later part of his tenure board controversy raged around colorful conductor and musical director Hungarian-born Laszlo Gati.

Pro-Gati supporters in the general membership feared

LIKE WAX MELTING, the city's rooftop signs and billboards are steadily disappearing as businesses comply with the tough requirements of Victoria's sign bylaw, which came into effect on the weekend after a three-year phase-out period. About 100 signs are still non-conforming — many of them on Douglas Street — but City Hall is taking a tolerant view of such infractions and relying on good co-operation with the firms concerned.

Victoria Police Chief Jack Gregory and some other Canadian police chiefs say they fear the public might resort to vigilante action to deal with murderers if the federal government continues to commute death sentences.

The chiefs' statement was sharply criticized today by a University of Victoria expert who said such statements could incite police and others to take the law into their own hands.

A committee report on capital punishment to be considered in Toronto this week at the 70th annual conference of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police says:

"Our greatest concern is that some elements of society may seriously consider taking the law into their own hands."

The federal cabinet has commuted all death sentences since 1962. The death penalty now is confined by law to slayings of on-duty prison guards and policemen.

"The public . . . is concerned with any killings and no doubt emotions will be involved as the killings continue," said Gregory, who is president of the chiefs' association.

He said he believed the possibility of vigilante action was a very real danger."

The association wants the death penalty restored and used for what Metropolitan Toronto Chief Harold Adamson calls all cold-blooded and premeditated murder.

Prof. Keith Johnson of the UVic law faculty said of the chiefs' statements: "It appears that saying this kind of 'agreement' from the charges was insufficient to rule out guilt."

Johnson's defense lawyer Michael Hutchison said outside the courtroom an appeal will likely be made mainly on the grounds that wiretap evidence should not have been allowed in court.

"If they (the police) don't like the law and they can't stomach it then they should resign," he said.

And the law does give the federal cabinet the right to commute death sentences, he said. Any intimations that cabinet isn't upholding the law by allowing the death penalty to be carried out are wrong.

What we have in Canada are two contradictory laws, one giving the death penalty for murderers of police and prison guards, the other giving the cabinet the power to commute, he said.

The chiefs should be demanding that the contradiction be cleared up, not suggesting the government is wrong to commute sentences, said Johnson.

"They're interested in putting forward a point of view, not getting the facts (of the capital punishment controversy) out," he said of the police chiefs.

"They've got a high-powered association. If they don't know the facts then they shouldn't be shooting their mouths off."

Chiefs interviewed in Toronto were critical of the federal government for ignoring what they said appears to be a strong public sentiment for restoring the death penalty. Some said Solicitor-General Warren Allmand should step down because he has said he would resign before signing an execution order.

Winnipeg Chief Norman Stewart said commuting death sentences makes a mockery out of justice."

"Somebody who doesn't uphold the law shouldn't be in a position to change it automatically," he said.

Douglas Crosbie, Belleville, Ont., chief, said the capital punishment issue should be decided by national referendum.

In another report, federal legislation to ease penalties for possession of marijuana comes under fire and immigration laws are described as inadequate.

Chiefs also are to consider a committee report recommending greater use of lie detectors and their possible acceptance in Canadian courts.

Some chiefs described their major problems as an increase in crime in Canada and a decrease in age of offenders.

Jean Savaria, executive officer of the Montreal urban police service attributed a wave of hold-ups in that area to "youth and violence."

Vancouver Chief Don Winterton said heroin addiction is the main problem in his city and Gordon Torrance, chief of Hamilton-Wentworth regional police in Ontario cited Hamilton's motorcycle gangs pushing drugs as his major concern.

Students Need Housing

Another 1,000 to 1,500 housing offers are needed to accommodate the increased student population at the University of Victoria this fall, the manager of student housing service said today.

"It's getting really difficult for the students," said Shirley Baker. "There are some who have decided not to attend university this year because they can't find places to stay."

She said that places have only been found for about 700 to 800 students.

"The only way we're going to make it is to get about 40 housing offers a day."

They are seeking housing for undergraduate, graduate, single and married students from out of town needing somewhere to live from Sept. 1, 1975, to April 30, 1976.

Baker said offers will be accepted at the UVic display at the Hillside Mall Thursday to Saturday, or people can call the housing office at 477-0177.

Fernwood Days Frolics

Rain washed out the street dance Saturday night but it held off long enough for more than 300 people to enjoy other events included in the annual Fernwood Days at Stevenson Park. There were games of chance and contests for both young and old. Crowned king and queen were Harvey Chow and Teresa Helaslaik. More than $300 was raised. (Photo by John McKay)

Mall Disappoints Pollen

Mayor Peter Pollen today admitted he is "rather disappointed" in the workmanship of the Government Street Mall, but urged the public to reserve its opinion on the project in general until it is completed and the trees and other finishing touches added.

He said the Greenpeace Foundation had sent the 90-foot fishing boat Pride of Fundy, skippered by Al Reiner of Victoria, into Pedder Bay on Sunday to make an above-water and underwater search of the area.

He said Greenpeace Foundation member Mel Gregory of Victoria believes that one of the six whales caught is already dead.

Marining said Sunday's show that one part of the large net used to hold the whales had been torn and recently repaired.

Marining said a report has been received that a large motor vessel entered Pedder Bay after the Green Spray left Saturday night and was seen leaving, towing something out to sea.

He said Gregory and others are convinced one of the captured whales became tangled in the nets and died.

He was commenting on recent criticism of the civic improvement in the weekly publication Monday.

Pollen said he considers the construction itself to be "sub-standard," especially "the work on the tiling surface which is 'mediocre to poor.'

He also feels more imagination and flair could have been used in the actual selection of a decorative tile treatment, as has been done successfully in some of Europe's outstanding malls.

"On the other hand I think we have definitely improved what was in my opinion a derelict street," he added. "It has certainly upgraded the benches, shrubs and so on, and get the thing cleaned up, in total it's going to be a hell of an improvement."

Down on Form Letter

DEAR ABBY: Since your column is so widely circulated, you can do much for the serious unemployment situation in this country.

I am an executive secretary with one of the top 100 companies in the country. Almost every day, we get applications for employment, some from new college graduates and some from older men who have been in the business world 20 to 30 years.

I'd like to tell these people not to use form letters with their names typed in but to type out neat, individual letters with the attached resume. My boss feels a form letter indicates that the applicant wants a job with any company, but an individualized letter means he wants a job with our company and no other. The form-letter applicants are not even asked what if Bonnie decides to put out her life and not even tell her son about his natural father? Is that fair to us?

Our grandson is all we have left of John.

What if Bonnie decides to put out her life and not even tell her son about his natural father? Is that fair to us?

Should we try to keep in contact with Bonnie in hopes that we can see our grandson one day? Or would it be better for him if we dropped out of the picture? We will abide by your decision.—GRIEVING PARENTS

DEAR ABBY: Here is our dilemma: Our only son, John, committed suicide at age 22. His wife, Bonnie, was pregnant at the time. She immediately went to Canada to live with her people. (We live in New Jersey.)

Our grandson is now 2 years-old, and we've never seen him, because neither of us has had the money to visit.

Bonnie wrote to say she was married last June and her husband is adopting our grandson. We can understand why Bonnie wants to forget the tragic past and start a new life, and we agree that she should. (She's only 24.) But where does that leave us?

Our grandson is all we have left of John.

Extraordinary Day 50 Years Ago

By ELIZABETH FORBES
A wedding reception was arranged for the garden of the family home on Munro Street, just a short distance from the Esquimalt shore.

Two refreshment marquees were set up. The sun was shining and everything was in perfect order.

Suddenly, as the bridal party arrived from St. Paul's Garrison Church, where Canon T. M. Hughes, assisted by Mr. Chapman, had conducted the wedding ceremony, a stiff breeze came in over the water.

Floral arrangements were tipped over. A marquee blew down and the bride's veil was caught in one of its tangled ropes.

That was 50 years ago — Aug. 26, 1925. The wedding couple was Col. (now General) George R. Pearkes, V.C., hero of the First World War, and Constance Blytha, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. U. Copeman.

Reminiscing about the collapsed marquee today, Mrs. Pearkes told me, "Anyways, the cake was saved. It was in the one that didn't blow down."

She then spoke of "other extraordinary things" that happened.

Through a post office error, her engagement ring, selected in Winnipeg where Pearkes was stationed, was mailed to Sydney, Nova Scotia. Instead of Sydney, Vancouver Island, where the Copemans were living when the couple first became engaged.

To even things up, she said, "the morning of the wedding a lovely yellow canary flew in my bedroom window," and that surely brought us good luck."

As we talked I learned the Pearkes first met on a Sunday in 1924, when they sat in the same pew at Holy Trinity Church, Patricia Bay, where Canon Hughes was rector.

"I was visiting my mother and sister Hilda, who had a farm in that area," the General told me, in his usual forthright way.

Mrs. Pearkes spoke up with "three months later we were at a dance in the Sisson home."

With a quiet chuckle, he added "that's where I popped the question."

Then they looked at each

George and Constance Pearkes—then and now

other, smiled, and she said quietly "and we were engaged."

A year later they were married.

Hilda Pearkes and the bride's cousin, Betty Copeman, were attendants and George Paton of Winnipeg, a retired army officer, the best man.

Page boy was Douglas Newton, grandson of the doctor who was present at Blytha Copeman's birth on a cattle ranch not far from Calgary, owned by her parents before they moved to the Sidney area and finally to Esquimalt.

The honeymoon was at Banff in a cottage belonging to A. O. Wheeler of Sidney, a founder of the Alpine Club of Canada.

After that it was back to Winnipeg to begin 50 years of married life that have given the Pearkes a wealth of memories and many, many friends.

Early army years brought them briefly to Victoria, then took them to Kingston, Ottawa and Calgary, where Pearkes was respectively in command at Royal Military College, director of military training and Commanding Officer, Alberta Military District.

In 1950 the Pearkes came back to Victoria after he was named lieutenant-governor of British Columbia.

When he was sworn in for that office, he said "my wife and I will do our best to play the part now assigned to us."

That sums up exactly what they had been doing throughout their married life ... and exactly what they continued to do.

In their eight years at Government House they travelled thousands of miles by car, ship, train and plane, fulfilling engagements and meeting the people of this province.

Wherever they went, they were able to establish a relaxed air of friendship that put everyone at ease.

Honors and honorary degrees have been showered upon them. In 1968 when they left Government House and retired to the Tattersall Road place, they were made Freeman of Saanich; the first in that municipality's 62 year history.

A sports centre and a clinic for the handicapped have both received his name.

The Canadian Legion of Canada elected him Grand President and named him its outstanding member.

Victoria Council, Knights of Columbus, presented Mrs. Pearkes with its silver sword award for her outstanding support of her husband in all various careers.

When he was sworn in for that office, he said "my wife and I will do our best to play the part now assigned to us."

Throughout their married life the Pearkes have travelled extensively in the line of duty.

"Now, when they travel, it's entirely for pleasure. Early this year they spent a month in Australia and New Zealand. Recently they were in Toronto for Canadian National Exhibition Warriors'

Day, planned to honor Canada's V.C. winners and its veterans.

And so we come to the eve of their 50th wedding anniversary.

To mark the occasion, General and Mrs. Pearkes have issued invitations to a group of friends to join them tomorrow evening in the Gold Room of the Commons Block at University of Victoria.

Their son John, a Vancouver lawyer, his wife Joyce and their two sons, Anthony, now 15, and Timothy, 14, years will be there.

Also in the family group will be Miss Hilda Pearkes and Mrs. R. Gillmore, a distant cousin from Totness, Devon, England.

Victor Council, Knights of Columbus, presented Mrs. Pearkes with its silver sword award for her outstanding support of her husband in all various careers.

EXTINCTION AVERTED BY THE TURTLE LADY

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Tex. (CP) — A widow in her mid-70s has earned the title of Turtle Lady because she helped save a species of the marine reptiles from extinction.

Illa Loetscher, who lives on this southern tip of an island in the Gulf of Mexico, has a family of sea turtles. Ten years ago, Mrs. Loetscher became interested in the Ridley turtles when she moved to South Padre after the death of her husband, a Swiss engineer.

The turtles had disappeared some 20 years before from the island, killed for their delicate flesh and beautiful shells.

A local sportsmen's club started a project to bring the almost extinct turtles back to the island. Not much is known about the sea turtles except it is believed the females return to the place of their birth to lay their eggs. But only after seven years.

Mrs. Loetscher joined the club. Eggs were brought from Mexico where the turtles were almost extinct and hatching began.

Last year, one Ridley turtle returned after the seven years, proving the theory correct. She laid 117 eggs, but only 16 hatched.

Boy Genius, Leukemia Saw-Off

PLUMTREE, N.C. (AP) — Joe Hall has many things other nine-year-old boys would envy: a tree house, club house, a river filled with fish, a forest, a "mine," a dog, kittens, rabbits, three little brothers, a girlfriend and parents who love him.

He might be any lucky little boy. But he's not.

Joe Hall is a child so brilliant, so exceptional, that educators have simply assigned him to a token IQ of 200.

He is a child who, at 4½, discussed the implications of childhood leukemia with his doctor and knew the medical basis for his experimental treatments; and who now has battled the disease to a standstill, at least temporarily.

When Joe became ill, his mother took their out-dated encyclopedias and dug out sections which said the disease was incurable so he couldn't read them.

"He fought so hard. I think his determination is part of the reason he's alive today," said Judy Hall. There's still no guarantee the disease will not return.

Joe looks as happy and healthy as any child. But there seem to be two Joe Halls: the boy and the boy genius.

Joe, the boy, crumbles in his mother's homemade vegetable soup, fishes in the river 100 yards from his front door, and argues with his brothers.

The boy-genius expounds on theories about the origins of unidentified flying objects (UFOs), of specific sectors and pulsars. He believes UFOs are piloted by robots.

"I believe their spacecraft are propelled by electromagnetic waves. We would expect them to have robots by the way their spacecraft are designed," he explains patiently at first. When it becomes evident that his interviewer doesn't understand the fine points of lasers and electromagnetic fields, he gives up.

The child genius must deal with a world of people who cannot converse with him on his favorite topics. He must attend public school which teaches him little. He must deal with adults and other children who don't always understand him and sometimes, he implies, don't accept him.

But some outsiders, geniuses in their own right, have taken an interest in him.

Rocket expert Wernher von Braun sent Joe a copy of his book on rocketry. Joe wrote the scientist to point out an error. Von Braun acknowledged it had been missed by proofreaders.

In addition to his scientific knowledge, Joe has perfect musical pitch and studies periodically under Lili Kraus. His original compositions are much like Joe the boy: quick to change mood and tempo, almost mischievous.

The Hall family lives comfortably, but there are few luxuries. The breadwinner, James Hall, is a country high school band director. His wife, Judy, cares for their four sons.

Joe's medical expenses have been astronomical. The special schools which James Hall wants for his son will be expensive, too. But money is not the only reason Joe is still at home.

"You can't send a child that young away from home, especially one with Joe's medical problems," says Hall.

So, older than a short-term weekend program for gifted children at Appalachian State University in nearby Boone, N.C., Joe has been in public school with children still at home.

"He fought so hard. I think his determination is part of the reason he's alive today," said Judy Hall. There's still no guarantee the disease will not return.

Viet Refugees 'Treated Like Slaves in U.S.'

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — To most Vietnamese refugees the sponsor program looked like a way out. But to a few, it was the life of a house servant or partner in sexual pleasure.

— Two young men left because their sponsor was a homosexual.

— A 17-year-old girl fled the house of her millionaire protectors because they made love in front of her.

— Another said he was being forced to enter a seminary to become a preacher.

Some refugees are treated like children by responsible parishioners.

Tran Van Son called his protector an "exploiter." The American said Son was "lazy." Their relationship lasted two days.

Son later was sent to live in a Los Angeles hotel with other refugees waiting for relocation with another American family. But he said, "I don't want to return to any American family. I just want to get a job and be free from forced labor."

They now hate the word "sponsor." To them the good image of America is clouded with hatred.

The government task force handling the resettlement of refugees said the breakdowns represent only a minor problem.

At Camp Pendleton, Calif., officials said there have been about 50 cases involving some 200 persons out of the 32,000 Vietnamese released from the camp in the past three months.

The breakdowns, in reality, are more widespread. Those who battled openly quit their sponsors while others, because of fears and the language barrier, chose to take what was given them.

"My wife and I were forced to work nine hours a day and six days a week for $200 a month," Son said.

"There was no break during the day, even for lunch, and our four-year-old boy was just starving. The sponsor never allowed my wife to take care of our son during the day."

"We were treated as slaves and were threatened with starvation."

The couple received a daily list of chores including fixing breakfast for the "masters" and making their beds.

Two widows and their six children were taken to Phoenix, Ariz., to live with a Protestant church. Instead they were put to live with Mexican-Americans.

"The daily schedule was from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m." Mrs. Hoai Anh said. "During that time we were told to work and make money for the congregation. We ate only potatoes and carrots, no meat in three weeks."

"We were not allowed to talk to anybody. There were no clothes and we had to share the bedrooms with a dozen persons completely strangers to us."

She said that when Red Cross representatives investigated her complaint the sponsor showed clothes collected for the refugees which they never received.

The children must attend two hours of religious classes a day.

Their parents were asked to attend the church although they said were Buddhists.

Tran Thi Bich, her two children and her sister live with a childless American couple in California and their relationship has been fine. But the sponsors pushed them to take welfare aids and took their first cheque and food stamps.

But for Nguyen Thuc Dam, his wife and four children the dream has come true.

They live in a three-bedroom house rented at $265 a month by the Lutheran Church at LaHabra, Calif.

The church plans to give them $600 a month, including rent for one year, until Dam can support his family.

Gil and Mary Ann Sheets who housed Dam's family the first three weeks said they were delighted.

"We never did anything like that before. The Vietnamese taught us a lot of things like not to waste food."

Refugees at Camp Pendleton, however — aware of the breakdowns — now prefer church sponsorship. Many have rejected offers to live with American families for fear of incompatibility.

This situation is stranding thousands in the camp and there apparently is no end in sight.

NEW QUEEN PAY HIKE?

LONDON (WP) — The government will introduce legislation in Parliament later this year to provide for a major increase in the Queen's "pay." The scheme is likely to provoke a massive debate in view of the government's pay-restraint policy.

In 1971 there was a similar rebellion by Labor MPs who voted against doubling the Queen's income to 980,000 pounds ($2.5 million at the rate of exchange then).

decision to increase the Queen's income by 420,000 pounds a year to 1.4 million pounds (3.3 million at the rate of exchange then) in the most spectacular rebellion of this Parliament.

Six months ago, 89 Labor members of Parliament voted against the government's decision to increase the Queen's income by 420,000 pounds a year to 1.4 million pounds (3.3 million at the rate of exchange then) in the most spectacular rebellion of this Parliament.

DETROIT (WP) — Michigan State Police and the FBI believe that the Mafia is deeply involved in the disappearance of former Teamster President James Hoffa and may have arranged to have him killed.

"Things that we've come up against in our investigation point in that direction," said state police Capt. Lewis Smith, who is co-ordinating the investigation.

"What we know raises the suspicion that that's the case."

That view was echoed by an FBI source who added that the bureau is considering the possibility that underworld figures and Hoffa and his union may have acted in concert.

The source further said that several current Teamster leaders will be questioned for the second time beginning next week because of "inconsistencies" in what some of them told the FBI earlier this month.

Despite the growing conviction that, as one Justice Department source put it, "we think we know what happened and why," FBI sources and state officials say they are no closer to identifying the individuals responsible for Hoffa's disappearance than when the investigation began July 30.

"We have several lines of thought that we're pursuing," said Wilburn DeBruler, special agent in charge of the FBI office in Detroit.

"It's not hopeless by any means."

Unless substantive new evidence is uncovered soon, the state police will begin winding down their investigation within two weeks, said Capt. Smith.

"We really haven't been able to develop that initial investigative lead that breaks open a case," Smith said. "It's really frustrating, but there's not much more that we can do," he said.

The state police and FBI are basing their belief that the Mafia is involved on several factors.

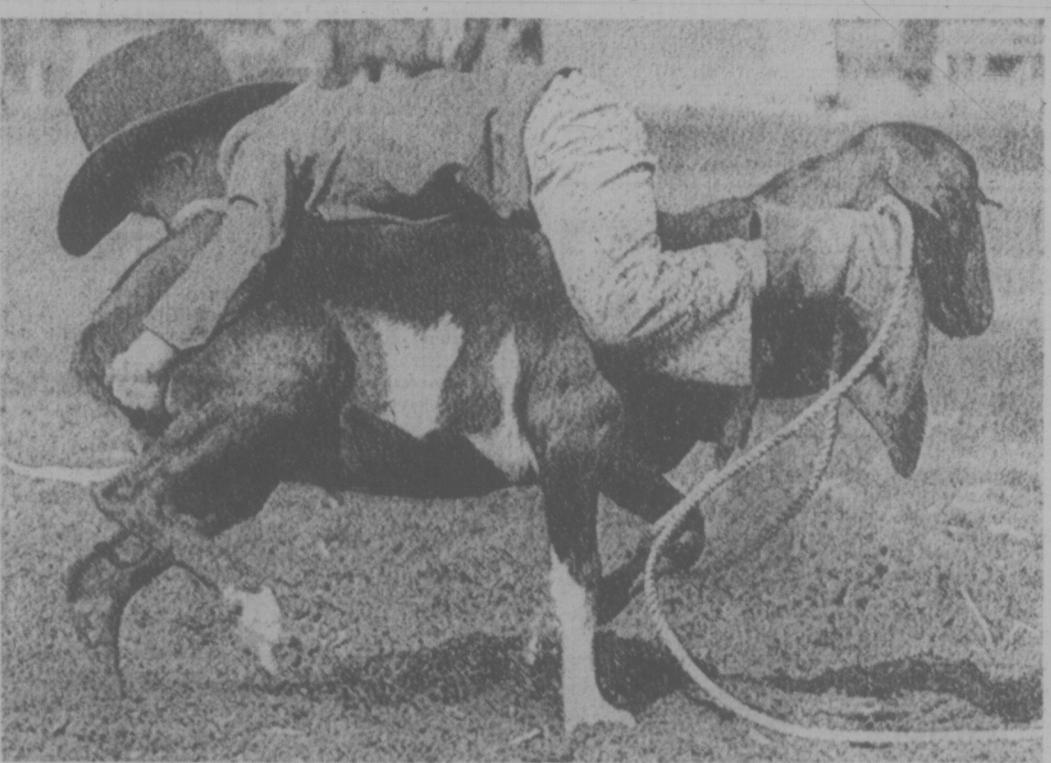

They include: The careful planning and preparation that appear to have gone into Hoffa's abduction; the extreme difficulty the FBI and state police are having in questioning key underworld figures and several Teamster leaders believed to have knowledge about what happened to Hoffa; and the alleged financial advantages to the underworld organization in keeping Hoffa from participating in union politics.

These factors and the lack of any word about Hoffa have led state and most federal authorities to conclude that he is almost certainly dead. Most doubt his body will ever be found.

Pylons Delivered By Big 'Copter

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro says it is the first company in Canada to use a Sikorsky Skycrane helicopter to deliver complete transmission line towers.

Work began near Revelstoke in July and will continue in September.

The Skycrane, which can lift up to 22,400 pounds of cargo, was used to install the first 300-kilovolt line from Hydro's Mica Dam power project, 85 miles north of Revelstoke. First power from the dam is scheduled to move in the fall of 1976.

Hydro and its contractor, Chinook Construction and Engineering Ltd. of Vancouver, which is building 139 miles of the line, plan to use the Skycrane to deliver 518 of the 600 towers to be installed under the $4.5-million contract.

Fine Musical Sunday Smorgasbord

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Times Staff

The Shawnigan Summer School provided a lavish musical smorgasbord Sunday at the Arts McPherson Playhouse.

For the gourmet taste, any three of the nine-outstanding items in the concert would have been enough to savor in one evening.

But if the Shawnigan School directors set out to dazzle, they did just that. Where, even at the world's great festival centres, would one be likely to hear so many international level performances on one program?

There was also a bonus for the nationalists among the several hundred people that attended — more than a third of the concert items were provided by Canadians.

From the opening, a sensitively nimble and stylish performance of Mozart's D major Quartet by the Oxford String Quartet with flutist Robert Aitken, to the authorial virtuosity of violinist Ruggiero Ricci's unaccompanied Bartok at the end, this was an evening few will forget.

The lush beautiful tone of Phyllis Malling's mezzo soprano added a special and lovely texture to the quartet in its performance of Chausson's Chanson Perpetuelle.

Youthful pianist Robin McCabe who partnered the ensemble as well as Malling in a charmingly performed group of songs by Charles Ives and Aaron Copland, later displayed impressive power, and artistically applied virtuosity in Liszt's Mephisto Waltz No. 1.

The tonal balance and luminous texture of the quartet was emphasized in Shostakovich's No. 8, opus 110, a major work demanding enormous control and nuance in its long elegiac largo movements.

Even in a program of this stature there can occur a highlight and this came with the appearance of cellist Michael Virizlay.

In a Divertimento by Haydn

in which he was rather simply partnered at the piano by Lisa Bergman, he riveted attention with the iridescent yet strong and rich quality of his tone, brilliant phrasing and rhythmic vitality.

His second selection was a fantastically difficult unaccompanied movement by Zoltan Kodaly which he performed with breath-taking brio, the fluency of his bow matched by incredible left-hand dexterity.

Two concerts remain in the Guitarist-singer Paul Hann will perform Saturday and Sunday at 8 p.m. at Open Space, 510 Fort. Originally from London, England, Hann has been living in Edmonton since 1967. He has played in coffee houses and on campuses across Canada.

His more than 30 radio and TV appearances include the Ian Tyson Show and he has recorded an album entitled A Fine White Thread.

He will perform in blues, folk and country mediums on 12 and six-string guitars.

Israel Ouster Pushed

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Nine teen Arab countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization asked the Third World conference opening here today to join in a demand for Israel's expulsion from the United Nations.

The request to the conference of 78 self-styled non-aligned countries was unanimously adopted Sunday night at a four-hour Arab caucus, said Syrian spokesman Mouaffak el-Allaf.

He predicted the resolution would be adopted "by an overwhelming majority" of the conference.

This Syrian proposal and a Palestinian draft submitted earlier to the conference accused Israel of violating the UN Charter by continuing to occupy Arab lands seized in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"If the Israelis understand the meaning of this resolution, then they will work for peace," said el-Allaf, indicating that the purpose of the proposal was to pressure the Israelis into relinquishing more territory.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

Rustling is considered to be one of the worst crimes in the book in the San Antonio territory where Life Master Ben Fain stables his fat collection of master points, but not when it comes to rustling up an overtrick in a duplicate game. Overtrick seekers have to be quieter than prospectors for uranium ore; so they cannot use a Geiger counter: the clicks might warn the opponents. But Fain doesn't need one, as can be witnessed in today's deal.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

POUND POOCHE RIDE GRAVY TRAIN TO FREEDOM

EDMONTON (CP) — A mysterious champion of canine liberty struck again at the city pound over the weekend, releasing impounded pooches for the second time in a week.

About 50 dogs regained their freedom after the culprit broke a window at the pound and opened the door. Twenty-four of the inmates are still missing.

Inside, police found a note from the culprit reading: "This is the masked mysterious dog lover. You don't believe me, eh? Watch!"

Police continue to doggedly pursue the case but have so far been unable to sniff out a suspect.

★ SPORTS ★

It's been a long time coming, but London Boxing Club brought Victoria its first Canadian soccer championship. The Boxers captured the national amateur title Sunday with a well-deserved 3-1 victory over St. Lawrence Laurentians of St. John's, Nfld. See story on Page 12.

Victoria Bates also made a move in their bid to bring another national title to B.C.'s capital. Bates won their first two games in the Canadian senior men's tournament being played at Oshawa. Page 12.

Wendy Barlow and Jennifer Bland also added lustre to Victoria's image. They came up winners in the Canadian closed junior tennis championships at Ottawa. Wendy won the girls 16-and-under singles title and shared a doubles' triumph while Jennifer shared the 14-and-under doubles. Page 15.

Victoria McDonalds helped themselves and treated their fans to a solid display of lacrosse Sunday. The Bakers advanced to the Western Canada Major Junior League final by defeating Richmond Roadrunners 10-7 before almost 2,000 fans at Esquimalt Sports Centre. Page 12.

Ed Halicki of San Francisco Giants became the first pitcher to fashion a no-hitter in the National Baseball League in two years. He did it Sunday as the Giants defeated the New York Mets 6-0. Page 14.

Kelowna's Dave Barr captured his first pro tournament by winning the B.C. Open Sunday in Vancouver, while veteran Al Gelberger and Judy Rankin emerged as golf's other winners. Page 12.

Typhoon Kills 22

TOKYO (Reuters) — Typhoon Rita, the second typhoon to hit Japan in a week, left 22 persons dead, six missing, and about 16,000 homeless after cutting a path across western and northern Japan, police said Sunday.

The sources declined to specify what action Fabiao and his moderate supporters might take if this ultimatum was not met, but politicians speculated that an attempt to take over the government by force could be imminent.

Heroism Awards For 6

Three RCMP officers from Victoria are among six Canadians to receive the Governor-General's medal for bravery after avoiding the use of guns in a Vancouver bank robbery at considerable risk to their own lives.

RCMP Sgt. Thomas Charlton, Const. Brian Leicht and Const. James Bell apprehended without the use of firearms two gunmen during the robbery in Dec. 1973 and will be decorated at a special ceremony at Government House in Ottawa later this year.

Charlton and Bell have since been transferred and are currently working at the RCMP detachment in Burnaby, and Leicht is stationed at Langley.

The officers avoided a shoot-out to protect bystanders at the bank's shopping mall location while the robbery was taking place. They waited until the culprits made their exit before springing on them and wrestling them to the ground.

Bell was wounded during the incident, but later recovered and no lives were lost.

Other recipients of the bravery medals for acts of heroism are: Stephen Campbell, 15, of Kamloops, who saved the life of a friend who fell into an underground brush fire; Ronald King, of Manitoba, who suffered serious injuries while rescuing his family from a house fire; and Charles Leboeuf, of Ontario, who saved two friends from drowning.

Bourassa Demands Ultimate Powers

By ROB BULL

Times Quebec Bureau

MONT GABRIEL, Que. — Premier Robert Bourassa took his Quebec Liberal party a step closer to the position of the Parti Quebecois Sunday.

He insisted on requiring that Quebec have "the final powers of decision" over immigration, communications and language before considering opening discussions on the partition of the Canadian constitution.

The premier's remarks are his government's clearest statement to date on what he means by cultural sovereignty, a phrase which emerged as a campaign slogan before the last provincial election in 1973.

Bourassa made the statement at a news conference following a provincial Liberal think-in at this Laurentian resort 40 miles north of Montreal.

The biggest change in his party's traditional federalist stance is the demand for ultimate power to decide who can enter and leave his government's area of jurisdiction, something which is implied by his demand for ultimate control over immigration.

Whether this means that the premier who was elected as a federalist is turning towards separation depends on a wide variety of factors, not the least being the degree to which Bourassa and his advisers feel a new constitution is necessary at this time.

Bourassa has been under heavy pressure from Ottawa to agree to constitutional discussions. He may, however, be unsure of what the future holds in store for his province and thus be afraid to commit himself to anything more than the current "common law" relationship with the rest of the country.

When he demands that the Quebec government be the final authority to decide the cultural and linguistic composition of his province, he may be simply stalling and fully aware that he is requesting a concession which is impossible for Ottawa to give because it limits the fundamental nature of Canadian citizenship, the right of anybody to live in any part of Canada he wants, no matter which of the country's two official languages he happens to speak.

Bourassa says he still considers himself a federalist.

He told newsmen he does not favor "African-style independence . . . where one day you have the fireworks and the appointment of an ambassador to the United Nations and the next day the chaos starts."

Bourassa prefers to think of Quebec's relationship with Canada in European terms and uses the analogy of several countries sharing a single economic union who are moving towards the creation of a central parliament to handle certain common problems.

From the premier's point of view it would be perfectly acceptable for all other provinces to have the same powers which he demands for Quebec.

In any case, he added, the federal government would still administer the free trade area and allocate resources from its richer regions to its poorer ones. It could also continue to be responsible for defence and the post office and frequencies like that.

One out-of-province newsman asked the premier if a logical outcome of his demands is necessary at this time.

A Father and a Son: It's Never Forgotten

Of all the major regrets of living, I suppose, the most poignant is the omission made by so many of us who neglected to tell our fathers that they were admired, respected and loved.

We take it so much for granted when we're young that a father will have a profound influence on our lives that, all too often, a man may reach middle age or beyond before it comes to him that his old man was a wonderful guy. That such an awareness may arrive long after the father is no longer around to hear it is surely one of life's sadder moments. We communicate this affection in many positive ways to our mothers. It is rarely said directly to a father.

I have been thinking along these lines because of a beautiful and touching letter that I've had from Dr. Hugh L. Keenleyside, a man I count as one of the finest I've known. There is a line in Dr. Keenleyside's note: "I had shared a great experience with an admired friend" — that I'll long treasure as the perfect expression of an ideal son-to-father relationship.

A passing note here about picking blueberries atop Grouse Mountain had struck a nostalgic chord with Dr. Keenleyside and I think his reminiscences speaks for themselves.

"As a small boy in the early years of this century I lived in Vancouver," he writes. "When I was six or seven my father, realizing that I had never climbed Grouse, offered to take me and a number of boys from my Sunday School class for a picnic on the mountain.

"Early in the morning we crossed the Inlet (now the harbour) on the old North Vancouver ferry — the little ship-shaped vessel, not one of the great, flat-ended ferries that came later. On the North Shore we took one of the two old single-truck street cars that alternated in running a couple of miles up and down Lonsdale Avenue. We rode to the end of the line and then started up the rough dirt road on foot.

"After a mile or so the road ended and we started to climb up a narrow, rocky, root-crossed path. It was not climbing, as the word is usually used, but the trail was steep and the day soon became warm. We went on and on, resting every 10 minutes or so to catch our breath or to take a drink from one of the many streams we had to cross.

"After a couple of hours we were getting pretty tired and Father inquired of a man coming down the trail how far we were from the top. 'Oh,' he answered, 'about another half mile.' Cheered by this estimate we went on with revived hope. But by the time we had climbed for another hour Father asked a party descending noisily and cheerfully from the top how far we had yet to climb. We were not enthused by the reply: 'about a half mile more.' However, in response to Father's comment 'Well, come on, boys, we are at least holding our own' we emulated Excelsior and after a bit reached 'the plateau'.

"Far below the city and the waters from the North Arm to Vancouver Island glittered in the noonday sun. Around us at the evergreens, wild flowers and dense undergrowth gave a fresh tang to the air. But more important — because by this time we were ravenously hungry — was the fact that everywhere we looked around our rocky outcrop were bushes loaded, bending over, with enormous indigo colored berries. I had never before tasted a blueberry.

"And never have I had such a lunch. In later years I have been fortunate in having had opportunities to enjoy the expertise of many of the world's famous restaurants. None of them could equal the sardine sandwiches of crusty, home-made bread, the cold mountain water, and the juicy succulence of the blueberries on the top of Grouse Mountain. Lucious with his larks' tongues, and honey from Hyacinth, never had an experience like ours. The nectar and ambrosia fed to the Gods on Mount Olympus could not match the blueberries and sardines on Mount Grouse!

"Eventually, replete, having satisfied our mouths with good things, and our youth having been renewed like the eagle's, we stumbled down the mountain and returned happily to our homes. But at least for me the memory never faded."

Dr. Keenleyside's fresh memory of a day 70-odd years in the past, is not at all surprising. I would guess that every man has some remembered incident in his youth, some shared experience with a father, that survives intact long after other remembrances of the past have gone.

I don't know about Hugh, but think in most cases this comes from the surprising discovery that a father is also a human being. My own memories go back before any concept of the so-called generation gap, but a father was known as a disciplinarian, a man with the weight of the world or, at least, his little, depression-ridden slice of it, upon his shoulders, someone to look up to as a voice of authority and leadership.

And so when I think about my father I almost always see him poling out on a crude raft up at the First Lake on Hollyburn Ridge, or introducing us to Polloph Pogue, who lived in complete disarray in a cabin at the Old Mill and who made me a few bows that I treasured for years, or teaching us to camp at Albert Canyon, so near the transcontinental railway-tracks that when the train came through it seemed to swallow us whole.

These were the times when I found that my father loved to laugh, that he loved to share the outdoors with us and became, indeed, a boy like us when he dropped the mantle of duty. I never told him, not having the words, what this meant to me. All I can hope is that, somehow, he knew.

$80,000 Grant For Symphony

The Victoria Symphony Society has received double the Canada Council grant it received in 1974 but less than the amount for which it applied.

Board chairman John Di Castri said today it will receive $80,000, compared to $40,000 in 1974. A total of $87,000 had been requested.

Meanwhile, it was announced Saturday that the symphony manager John Roffey resigned Aug. 15, three days after the board had decided to ask for his resignation.

Roffey was unavailable for comment today.

Di Castri said Roffey's resignation was not part of a "witch hunt or vendetta." He said the board wanted to re-vamp the organization without a manager for a while.

Di Castri said a small committee of board members would do managerial duties

"We want to go from semi-professional orchestra to a more professional one," Di Castri said. "We want a broader approach to the whole business."

He said applicants for the symphony manager post would have to have "professional symphony background."

Roffey, who has indicated he will talk about his dismissal later, has been manager for nearly two years. In the later part of his tenure board controversy raged around colorful conductor and musical director Hungarian-born Laszlo Gati.

POUND POCHEES RIDE GRAVY TRAIN TO FREEDOM

EDMONTON (CP) — A mysterious champion of canine liberty struck again at the city pound over the weekend, releasing impounded pooches for the second time in a week.

About 50 dogs regained their freedom after the culprit broke a window at the pound and opened the door. Twenty-four of the inmates are still missing.

Inside, police found a note from the culprit reading: "This is the masked mysterious dog lover. You don't believe me, eh? Watch!"

Police continue to doggedly pursue the case but have so far been unable to sniff out a suspect.

24-HOUR LIMIT SET IN LISBON

LISBON, Portugal (UPI) — Military sources said today Gen. Carlos Fabiao, the army's moderate chief of staff, had given President Francisco Da Costa Gomes a 24-hour ultimatum to oust Premier Vasco Goncalves and form a new government.

The sources declined to specify what action Fabiao and his moderate supporters might take if this ultimatum was not met, but politicians speculated that an attempt to oust the government by force could be imminent.

Heroism Awards For 6

Three RCMP officers from Victoria are among six Canadians to receive the Governor-General's medal for bravery after avoiding the use of guns in a Vancouver bank robbery at considerable risk to their own lives.

RCMP Sgt. Thomas Charlton, Const. Brian Leicht and Const. James Bell apprehended without the use of firearms two gunmen during the robbery in Dec. 1973 and will be decorated at a special ceremony at Government House in Ottawa later this year.

Charlton and Bell have since been transferred and are currently working at the RCMP detachment in Burnaby, and Leicht is stationed at Langley.

The officers avoided a shoot-out to protect bystanders at the bank's shopping mall location while the robbery was taking place. They waited until the culprits made their exit before springing on them and wrestling them to the ground.

Bell was wounded during the incident, but later recovered and no lives were lost.

Other recipients of the bravery medal for acts of heroism are: Stephen Campbell, 15, of Kamloops, who saved the life of a friend who fell into an underground brush fire; Ronald King, of Manitoba, who suffered serious injuries while rescuing his family from a house fire; and Charles Leboeuf, of Ontario, who saved two friends from drowning.

Bourassa Demands Ultimate Powers

By ROB BULL

Times Quebec Bureau

MONTREAL (CP) — Premier Robert Bourassa took his Quebec Liberal party a step closer to the position of the Parti Quebecois Sunday.

He insisted on requiring that Quebec have "the final powers of decision" over immigration, communications and language before considering opening discussions on the Canadian constitution.

The premier's remarks are his government's clearest statement to date on what he means by "cultural sovereignty," a phrase which emerged as a campaign slogan before the last provincial election in 1973.

Bourassa made the statement at a news conference following a provincial Liberal think-in at this Laurentian resort 40 miles north of Montreal.

The biggest change in his party's traditional federalist stance is the demand for ultimate power to decide who can enter and leave his government's area of jurisdiction, something which is implied by his demand for ultimate control over immigration.

When he demands that the Quebec government be the final authority to decide the cultural and linguistic composition of his province and thus be afraid to commit himself to anything more than the current "common law" relationship with the rest of the country.

Whether this means that the premier who was elected as a federalist is turning towards separation depends on a wide variety of factors, not the least being the degree to which Bourassa and his advisers feel a new constitution is necessary at this time.

Bourassa has been under heavy pressure from Ottawa to agree to constitutional discussions. He may, however, be unsure of what the future holds in store for his province and thus be afraid to commit himself to anything more than the current "common law" relationship with the rest of the country.
